TIMES LATE THIS WEEK

The Times is a bit late this week because of New Year's Day coming on Monday which delayed us in getting news copy and material.

The plant was also rushed during the holidays in getting out a lot of commercial printing, and to top it all off, the Editor has been on the sick list the past week or more.

It is hoped that we can get all squared around so that the next issue of the Times will reach you on the regular date.

Annual Goodell-Klemme Game Is Feature Attraction Friday Night

SHAMROCKS PLAY GOODELL FRIDAY NIGHT ON LOCAL FLOOR

Coach Bowles has been working his Shamrocks hard in the short time available this week in preparation for the biggest home game of the season. Goodell comes to Klemme Friday night for the traditional big battle between the two schools.

So far in conference competition Goodell has won three and lost one, while Klemme has won two and lost two by narrow margins. A victory for Klemme would put the Shamrocks in a tie with Goodell for second place.

Goodell's big threat in early season games has been LeRoy Carolus gaint center, the largest man in the conference and probably the high scorer for the year in the Seven Eagles loop. Carolus has proved to be a difficult man to guard, but he does not play the game alone. His team mates are all good ball handlers and good shots and have come a long way since last year when they failed to win a conference game.

The Shamrocks have shown steady improvement all year, and the box scores will show that every man is a scoring threat. Coach Bowles regards this as a good sign and hopes to have his scoring machine in high gear Friday night.

PUBLIC INVITED TO ATTEND BIG BON FIRE AND CELEBRATION

Town Truck Will Gather Christma Trees Saturday Morning

The ancient custom of burning Christmas trees will be observed at Klemme this year.

This celebration of the 12th night will be held on Saturday Night, January 6th.

The High School Band, the Girl Scouts and such children of the community who wish to carry torches in the parade are asked to meet at the Methodist Church at 7:30 p. m.

From here the torch light parade will march to the scene of the Bon Fire. The Girl Scouts will lead in the singing of Christmas Carols and the Band will play.

The trees will be piled up on the Implement Company's lot west of the Wellemeyer Store building and when all is in readiness, Mr Grange mayor of Klemme, will apply a torch to the trees and all will enjoy the warmth and the brightness of this community Bon Fire.

It was an old belief that good luck would follow everyone who took part with the burning of the Christmas trees on Twelfth Night. We invite the entire community to attend this cheerful spectacle and wish you a Happy and Prosperous 1940.

Town folks will put their trees in the street outside their homes by Friday, please, so that the town truck can pick them up early Saturday.

The Rural folks will please bring their trees when they come to the celebration. The more trees—the more fun.

The rest of the afternoon was spent by playing games, after which a nice lunch was served. We also had a grab bag.

Necessity Mothered the Footwear of the Old West

In the days when the West was being won the boots developed as a handy item for a man who spent a lot of time in the saddle. The 2-inch heel was designed to prevent the foot from slipping through the stirrup. If your foot slipped through the stirrup and your horse took a tumble you could be sure of a nasty fracture. The sharp toe was calculated to fit the foot snugly into the stirrup, says the Kansas City Star.

The 6 or 7-inch height of the uppers developed in much the same practical manner. They protected the horseman's ankle from chafing by the saddle gear, kept the ankles warm in chilly weather and also saved wear and tear on trousers

The same practicality applied to the fancy stitching on the uppers. These elaborate designs were to prevent the soft uppers from collapsing around the wearer's instep. A prestiffened leather upper, it was discovered, was not comfortable enough. The high heel throws the weight of the body forward on the ball of the foot; the proper place for it. Most persons are inclined to stand or walk on their heels

The heavy-heel shoe stance throws the body out of line and if you stand around that way long enough you end up with a pain in your legs or in your back.

The pointed toe does not, as you might think, cramp your foot because your toes don't extend all the way. They stop about two inches short of the tip and have just as much room as they would have in regulation army brogans.

CHRISTMAS RUSH

Holiday Mail Problem Easier to Handle Since Public Started Helping Postmen

By HUGH THOMASON

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON. — By this time your Christmas card to the folks who used to live next door has been delivered in a distant community, and Aunt Matilda's gift package for the youngsters has arrived as usual — right on schedule.

Forty thousand postmasters are beginning to see daylight over a mound of letters, parcels, greeting cards and whatnot that showers down on the post office department each Holiday season. Pretty soon it will be over for another year, and the weary mailmen will start preparing for 1940.

This is a job that requires 3,770,000,000 postage stamps, an eye on the weather, machine-like co-ordination of railroad and postal facilities, oodles of patience with the well-meaning but lax public, and around $10,000,000 for extra clerk hire.

Beware of Fads!

It means watching out for population trends, economic conditions and those unpredictable mailing fads that grip the public fancy each Holiday season. One year they'll pour oceans of Christmas cards on a little village of 150 called Bethlehem, Md., the next year on Santa Claus, Ind., next on Christmas, Fla., and probably the following year at Noel, Va.

Why? Just to have their cards cancelled with a Christmas-y postmark which most of the recipients won't even notice. But it's fine old American tradition and the post office department must co-operate

Holiday postal rushes aren't what they used to be, but that doesn't mean the volume of mail is decreasing. On the contrary, it's on the upgrade. But the public has memorized those oft-repeated "shop early, mail early" slogans and they're taking more pity on the hapless mailman.

There's still a disheartening deluge of mail each season to that graveyard of good intentions, the dead letter office, where go all letters and parcels suffering from illegible, incorrect addresses and hopelessly poor wrappings from which the address has become lost altogether.

DELUGE!—A flood of Christmas mail descends on one of America's metropolitan post offices, bound for cities and hamlets hundreds of miles away.

An old hand in the postal service can decipher handwriting as illegible as an Egyptian cryptograph, but Christmas is just when the mail clerks don't have time to do it. Such detective jobs must then fall partly on the shoulders of inexperienced substitute postmen, which only emphasizes the need for legible addresses.

To outfox the dead letter office, many post offices have a "hospital" to doctor decrepit packages. In larger cities a half dozen men are assigned to this job during the Holidays, armed with patches, glue and cord. But sometimes the job is beyond them, spelling grief for both giver and intended recipient.

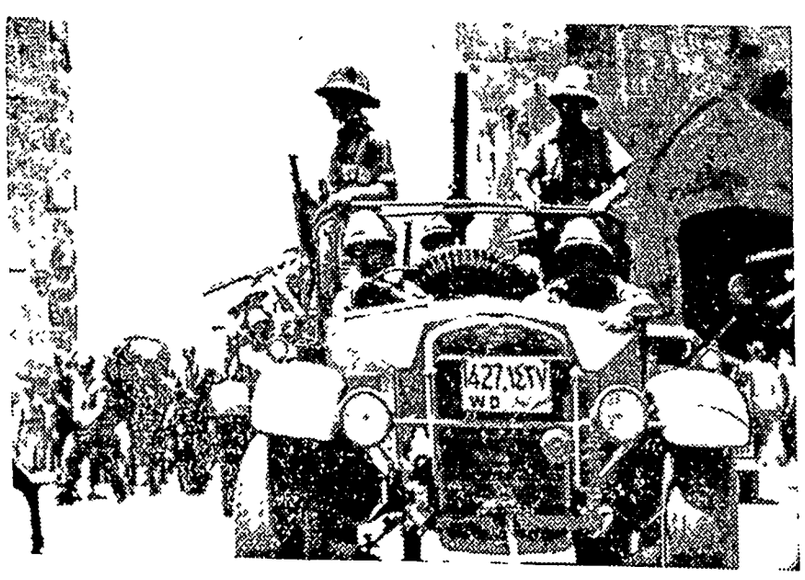
Mail Volume Anticipated.

Christmas preparations in the post office department begin in mid-summer, when individual postmasters send in their requisitions for stamps. They don't guess at it; instead they turn to reliable local sources like the chamber of commerce, board of trade and other commercial groups which can make a pretty good guess about local business conditions five or six months hence.

About the same time the bureau of engraving and printing begins turning out extra stocks of stamps for Christmas. This office doesn't wait for the postmasters to make their check; stamps must be printed immediately to avoid a log-jam later in the season.

Transportation equipment is the next problem When the post office department knows how much business is expected, railroads are notified to have the proper number of mail service cars in readiness when the rush starts. At local post offices special vehicles must be requisitioned for parcel delivery.

Christ's Village Fears Uprising As World Celebrates Nativity



NO PEACE HERE—British motorized troops patrol the streets of Bethlehem to prevent disorders.

"O little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie . . ."

WHILE America sings of Christ's birthplace this Yuletide, the little Palestine city of Bethlehem is smouldering under such a deep factional discontent that the event for which it is famous is being observed with cautious restraint this year.

Bethlehem's 1939 Christmas will be happier than last year's, however. At that time a shooting melee occurred in a cafe just across the square from the Church of the Nativity. British troops invaded the place, which was said to be a hideout for Arab rebels.

Long associated with the religion of brotherly love and the gentle art of the shepherd, Bethlehem has frequently, in its 30 centuries, been the scene of strife and bloodshed.

Rachel Died There.

Its first mention in the Bible is associated with death—that of Rachel, nearly 2,000 years before Christ. Tending his sheep around Bethlehem was the boy named David, who later slew his ten thousands to the mere thousands of Saul. In Bethlehem, says the Bible, occurred Herod's massacre of the infants in the time of Christ.

During the World war new battle lines were drawn around Bethlehem, when, in November, 1917, British and Turkish-German forces fought for Jerusalem, 5½ miles to the north.

Nearly 1,000 years ago one of the turning points of the Crusades occurred at an old church just outside Bethlehem, where Richard the Lion Hearted gave way before Saladin.

Cafes Encircle Church.

In time of peace, modern Bethlehem with its 10,000 people is a prosperous town with a flourishing tourist trade. Around the Church of the Nativity are cafes, noisy with radio music, soft drink establishments and curio shops selling postcards of sacred scenes, crosses, rosaries, carved wooden camels and other souvenirs.

The present strife centers around Arab opposition to making Palestine a haven for Jews, in accordance with Great Britain's plan Bethlehem and Jerusalem, which are connected with a modern highway in contrast with the Biblical simplicity of the surrounding country, remain strongholds of Arab leaders.

Bethlehem has no factories, big stores or swanky hotels, but its citizens keep busy in the fields and vineyards, with their flocks, or at such modest local trades as tinsmiths, stone masons, carpenters and shoemakers. Whole families make their living carving beads and other religious articles out of mother-of-pearl and olive wood for sale to tourists.

Everywhere in this old country the new jostles the old for right-of-way. Newsboys call special editions and Bethlehem's mayor drives his automobile to the municipal building, where his office is equipped with telephones and other modern devices. An electric star even hangs above Manger square.

Modern Colonists Plan New Home on Island in Bahamas

PASADENA.—Final farewells to sunny California will be offered next month by 25 "pioneers" leaving to start a colony on uninhabited East Caicos island at the eastern end of the Bahamas group, 750 miles from Miami.

Led by R. C. Irvine, Pasadena salesman, the party will live on the island belonging to Mrs. Grace Lake, who inherited it from her "salt king" grandfather, John Ney Reynolds. Part of the island is owned under a deed from the British crown, and the rest is leased for 99 years.

East Caicos' colonists will retain their American citizenship, returning to the mainland each two years to have their passports renewed.

Resources of the island, says Irvine, are sufficient to keep the group busy It is surrounded by shark-infested waters, the fish being valuable for the skin and liver oil. Thousands of wild jackasses, propagated by those left behind by a sisal development company many years ago, must be killed.

Part of 3,000 acres of sisal now growing wild will be cleared for papayas, valuable for medicinal purposes. The rest of the sisal land will be cultivated, the product being sold for manufacture of rope, twine, mattresses and upholstering.

Except for foundations left by former colonists and three huge tanks for catching rain water, the island now has no facilities for accommodating the group. But Irvine's pioneers expect to build homes, generate electricity from windmills and construct boats for communication with Turks island, 35 miles away.

It is also hoped to attract tourists to the five-mile strand of white coral beach, said to be excellent for duck hunting.

10-Year-Old Seattle Girl Hailed as Violin Prodigy

SEATTLE—The 10-year-old daughter of a cobbler may be America's next violin "prodigy." She is Anita Lipp, who first gained recognition this year when Mischa Elman, internationally famous violinist, heard her play and urged that she be given an opportunity to extend her education Small for her age, Anita uses a three-quarters-size violin and has remarkable stage presence. Conductors marveled when she played through difficult concertos for four hours without faltering.

THE people who insisted that all Marlene Dietrich needed to restore her to favor was one good picture have been proved right. "Destry Rides Again" has done it. Paramount, after letting her go, has engaged her again, this time to appear in Cecil B. DeMille's "North West Mounted Police."

She will have a role for which Dorothy Lamour was slated before "Destry"—and Marlene—rode again; the fact that the character is named "Loupette" suggests that provision has been made for the foreign accent.

Marlene Dietrich

As for the picture, "Destry Rides Again" you might call it a super-Western and not be far wrong. There's nothing super about the plot; it's one of the good old standbys. But Producer Joe Pasternak, who is largely responsible for Deanna Durbin's success, defied precedent when it came to casting, and gave the leading roles to two people to whom they wouldn't seem to belong.

James Stewart, fresh from the laurels won as the Mr. Smith who went to Washington, and Miss Dietrich, who was over-given to posing, have turned in beautiful performances.

And don't forget that a very able man named George Marshall directed it; no matter how good the actors were, a less capable director could have made a mess of things.

An inside picture of the New York Stock exchange is to be presented over Columbia's network Saturday, December 30. The on-the-scene broadcast, coming dramatically at the end of the year's trading, was said by stock exchange officials to be the first radio program to originate on the floor of the world's greatest organized stock market for securities. The broadcast will trace the steps from the time a customer puts in his order to the time he receives his receipt.

Allan Jones is sitting pretty; his contract with Paramount has been renewed for three more pictures. "The Great Victor Herbert" gave him the right opportunity to show what he could do, and also added a rung to those that Mary Martin has successfully climbed since she sang "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" in a theatrical production and made a hit overnight.

Mary Martin

Hollywood didn't want her at first; couldn't see that she had any possibilities. Now she's being pushed along as fast as she can go. Her next picture will be "Miami"; after that she'll star in "Kiss the Boys Goodby."

Ilona Massey, who co-starred with Nelson Eddy in "Balalaika," is following his example and going on a concert tour; she starts the first of the year . . . "The Housekeeper's Daughter" isn't half so bad as Joan Bennett's protests would make it appear.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D.
Dean of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for December 31

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

FRIENDS AND FOES OF THE KINGDOM

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.—John 15:14.

Inventory time has come, and it seems that our lesson for today, although it does come in the middle of our study of the Gospel of Matthew, comes too to sort of a pause to consider what has been the result of that which Jesus had said and done thus far in our study.

The answer we find is that He had both friends and foes, both love and hatred. His foes apparently outnumbered His friends, and the hatred was evidently fierce and the love none too warm. So Jesus was defeated? No, far from it. As we know, He won the victory over His enemies.

The situation is not different today. Those who follow Jesus and love Him truly are quite evidently in the minority and all too often it seems that hatred for the cause of Christ has the upper hand. Are we defeated? No, Jesus will ultimately win the victory again. We are on the winning side.

I. Dishonored Because of Jealousy (13:54-58).

One would have supposed that the people of the little, almost unknown town of Nazareth would have been thrilled at the return of its native son whose fame had also spread its name abroad and whose name was on the lips of thousands because He went about doing good.

They were astonished, but they were not ready to accept Him. They could not deny the fact either of His person or His power, but they could and did permit their personal pride and jealousy to lead them to deny Him. "This story teaches us the unutterable folly of refusing to accept fact because it is astonishing, yet there are thousands of people standing in that position today concerning Jesus Christ. It is utterly unscientific, not to say irreligious. Here is an astonishing thing. They say we cannot understand how this man hath this wisdom. Has He the wisdom? Why, yes, we cannot escape it. Then in the name of God and common honesty obey the injunction and postpone the investigation" (G. Campbell Morgan).

II. Hated Because of Sin (14:1-4).

The pride of heart which causes many to hold themselves too good to follow the lowly Nazarene is sin. There is also that which even the world recognizes as sin which separates men from Christ. D. L. Moody is said to have written on the fly leaf of his Bible, "This book will keep you from sin, or sin will keep you from this book." That is true, and it is also true that sin will keep a man from Christ.

Herod, living in sin, had been rebuked by John and had silenced his accuser by the simple expedient of imprisonment and ultimately by beheading him. But one does not thus put away sin, and when this man heard of Jesus, he at once assumed that John had risen from the dead to plague him still. So Herod also took his place with the enemies of our Lord.

If a man shows his opposition to Christ, whether it be by indifference, or by jealousy, or in outright hatred, be sure there is sin in that man's life. Those who love righteousness love the righteous Lord.

III. Accepted Because of Service (15:29-31).

"The Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister," even to the giving of "his life a ransom for many" (Matt. 20:28). We have so overemphasized and misused the word service that one almost hesitates to speak it in connection with the name of the Lord Jesus. Yet it does summarize His earthly life and ministry. He served the needy with His teaching and preaching, with His provision for their daily needs, with His healing touch, and we read that they wondered and glorified God (v. 31).

We said above that the majority of men appear to reject Christ, but that does not mean that He has no friends. "The communion of saints" is made up of a great and almost numberless host, including in its ranks the finest and most distinguished men and women of all ages who gladly stand side by side with the humblest of believers to be counted for the Lord Jesus.

As a means of encouraging men and women everywhere to follow Christ as they find Him in His Word, the writer of these notes will send without charge a folder, "The Why and How of Bible Reading," including a Bible-reading calendar for the entire year. Use the name and address at the head of this column and if possible enclose a stamped addressed envelope or a three-cent stamp.

The Carols We Sing at Christmas Perpetuate a Custom Which Began Centuries Before Birth of Christ

By
Catherine Ferguson Chalkley
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

CAROL singing in America at Christmas is the continuance of a custom which had its beginning many centuries before the birth of Christ when the Druids celebrated the festival of Gule in honor of the return of the sun at the winter solstice and which clung to the rites of the Christmas feast that replaced the ancient pagan festival after the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons into Christianity.

Back in the ages when the Druids gathered about the oaks to cut the mistletoe and offer it to the gods, the ancient Britons would join hands and dance in circles about their priests, singing praises of the deities as they danced. These dances came to be called "Carols" which means "Dancing Songs."

When Christianity came and the Christmas feast superseded the ancient feast of Gule, these dancing songs, along with other pagan rituals, were brought into the Christian church. Here, fused with Christian hymns, they became a substantial part of the ceremonies and customs surrounding the celebration of the Nativity.

As the centuries passed, however, the word "Carol" became more and more inclusive until, from the Middle ages down to the present day, it has ceased to name only a part of a religious ritual and is the term applied to Christmas songs and poems, convivial and sacred alike.

The First Christmas Carol.

To picture the beginning of the Christmas carols, one must imagine a star-lit plain where in the half gloom are huddled the shepherds and their flocks. Suddenly the sky becomes brilliant; the night is as bright as day. The angels have come to announce the birth of Christ. From the clouds comes the sound of heavenly voices singing the first Christmas carol:

"Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Since music has always had a large part in the worship of all peoples, it was only natural that the early Christians should compose hymns. That the writing of Christmas hymns had absorbed the attention of Latin churchmen early in the Christian era, we learn from the "Decretall Epistle" of Telesphorus. In the second century he wrote:

In the holy night of the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour, they do celebrate publique church services and in them solemny do sing the Angells hymne, because also on that same night he was declared unto the Shepherds by an Angell, as the truth itself doth Witnesse

By the Fourth century the singing of Christmas hymns had become an established custom wherever Christianity existed. The birthday of our Lord, however was not entirely given over to religious ceremonies. It was an occasion for so much merriment and good cheer that Gregory Nazianzen, who died in 389, in mentioning the feast of the Nativity, cautioned against feasting to excess, dancing, crowning the doors with wreaths and merry-making in general.

Origin in England.

In 523 Bede introduced Christianity into England, and that date, perhaps, marks the origin of the Christmas songs and poems we have today. Anglo-Saxons, after their conversion, showed a great fondness for religious music at the same time preserving their love for their old customs. Dearest to them of these customs were their dances. Hymns were composed, and when these hymns celebrated the best and greatest of all feasts, the Nativity, they were sung to dance tunes and danced about cribs that were set up in the churches

It was during the Tenth century that carols ceased to deal only with the Nativity, the Holy Family and sacred subjects They came to include festive and drinking songs. At this time, also, there came a curious intermingling of the sacred and profane in songs that were, one would suppose, meant to be strictly sacred in their praises.

The French Influence.

With William the Conqueror in 1066, there came a new influence into the English carol. For centuries in France it had been the custom to sing songs in honor of the Christmas season. These were called "Noels," and after the Norman invasion, the word "Noel," "Nowell," or "Novel" was used again and again in Christmas songs.

By the Twelfth and Thirteenth centuries Christmas carols were flourishing in all parts of England. They were usually set to simple, rhythmic melodies with "catchy" tunes characteristic of popular music. One of the early writers mentions this carol which was sung to the tune of "King Solomon":

Even Christ, I meane, that Virgin's childe,
In Bethlem born;
That lambe of God, that prophet mild,
Crowned with thorne.

Two Yuletide Customs.

Mystery and miracle plays, pageants and masques had reached the height of their development by the Fifteenth century. Into these performances, which sometimes lasted for several days, carols and drinking songs were frequently introduced. It is to the Fifteenth century, also, that several fine carols celebrating two of the oldest English yuletide customs, the bringing in of the boar's head to the Christmas feast and the drinking from the Wassail bowl, are attributed.

Singing a toast to the boar's head as it was being carried into the Christmas feast is a tradition that is probably almost as old as the celebration of Christmas on English soil. We know that by 1340 the custom had been established at Queen's college, Oxford, and that it has continued ever since. As trumpeters announced the arrival of the boar's head, the guests at the feast would rise and sing an appropriate song.

The legend of the wassail bowl dates back to the time when Rowena, daughter of the Saxon king, Hengist, presented a bowl of liquor to the British king, Vortigern, with these words: "Louerd king—Was-heil." To which the king replied: "Drinc heile."

From that time on "Was-heiling" became an expression of hospitality and good fellowship. During the Christmas season when conviviality was at its height, groups of gay merrymakers went from house to house, and the streets of the towns echoed with:

Wassail! Wassail! All over the town,
Our bread it is white, our ale it is brown.
Our bowl is made of a maplin tree,
To here, my good fellow; I'll drink to thee.

The wassailing bowl, with a toast within,
Come fill it up unto the brim;
Come fill it up so that we may all see;
With the wassailing bowl, I'll drink to thee.

Carols had their greatest vogue during the Sixteenth century. So popular had they become by 1521 that Wynkyn de Worde, one of the earliest printers in England, was induced to print a collection in that year. This undertaking had such a marked success that between the years 1546 and 1552, Rychard Kele got out an edition of Christmas songs which contained three volumes. Directly after these followed a series of collections. Ralph Newberry's appeared in 1559; John Tysdale, 1562; Thom Becon, 1563; Christopher Payne, 1569; Moses Powell, 1587.

Abolished by Puritans.

Carol singing had reached its height when the reformation attempted to sweep England clean of such a sacrilege as the festive celebration of Christmas. In the general onslaught of the Puritans carol singing was abolished and holly and ivy were made seditious badges.

Neither wholesale decrees nor fines and imprisonments could stamp out a custom so popular as the singing of Christmas songs. Men and women met secretly to observe the Yuletide and to keep alive its glorious traditions. So, when the restoration came, there was a general revival of carol singing throughout England.

Boys and troops of children would go through the streets on Christmas eve, singing the old carols and making their songs pretexts for collecting money. They went from house to house, receiving welcomes and cakes wherever they stopped.

Wandering minstrels also belong to this period. Up and down the land these songsters went. At the great Christmas gatherings of the squires and tenants, their carols were an important part of the entertainment. In 1661 appeared a new collection of songs called, "The New Carols for the Merry Time of Christmas, to Sundry Pleasant Tunes."

The custom of carol singing continued unabated until the end of the Eighteenth century when other interests and practices gradually absorbed it. During this century, however, two of the finest carols that we have today were written.

Hark! the herald angels sing
Glory to the new-born king;
Peace on earth, and mercy mild,
God and sinners reconciled! Etc.

And:

While shepherds watched their flocks by night,
All seated on the ground,
The angel of the Lord came down,
And glory shone around.

An artificial revival of carols brought many new and beautiful ones in the Nineteenth century. Swinburne, Chambers, Morris and many other poets celebrated the Christmas festival in verse derived and patterned, often, after the old Latin songs.

Brought to America.

Naturally the carols of England were brought to America along with other customs and ceremonies. They never became so popular here as in the Mother Country. However, since the beginning of the Twentieth century, there have been endeavors to make the singing of carols an American Christmas custom.

In the public schools, children were taught hymns and carols. In the churches, it is often the custom to have a song service. Sometimes the choirs go about the streets of the towns on Christmas eve or morning, singing carols as they go. Many schools and colleges make it traditional for one class to go about the campus and through the college buildings during the last day before the Christmas recess, caroling the other classes.

Whether or not carol singing will ever again have the vogue that it did during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries, is entirely a matter of conjecture, but it is safe to say that as long as there is an English language, there will be men and women who will cherish the old Christmas carols even though they may express their own festive spirits in new ones.

Robert Herrick, the famous poet of the Seventeenth century, wrote about 1650 one of the best-known of all Christmas carols:

Come, bring with noise,
My merrie, merrie boyes,
The Christmas log to the firing;
While my good dame, she
Bids ye all be free,
And drink to your heart's desiring.

With last yeeres brand
Light the new block, And
For good success in his spending,
On your psaltries play
That sweet luck may Come while the log is a teending.

Drink now the strong beere,
Cut the white loaf here,
The while the meat is a shredding;
For the rare mince-pie,
And the plums stand by,
To fill the paste that's a kneading.

Algernon Charles Swinburne, an English poet of the Nineteenth century, wrote one of the loveliest of all Christmas poems and called it

A CHRISTMAS CAROL

Three damsels in the queen's chamber,
The queen's mouth was most fair,
She spake a word of God's mother
As the combs went in her hair

Mary that is of might,
Bring us to thy Son's sight.

They held the gold combs out from her,
A span's length off her head;
She sang this song of God's Mother
And of her bearing-bed

Mary most full of grace,
Bring us to thy Son's face.

When she sat at Joseph's hand,
She looked against her side,
And either way from the short silk band
Her girdle was all wried.

Mary that all good may,
Bring us to thy Son's way.

Mary had three women for her bed,
The twain were maidens clean;
The first of them had white and red,
The third had riven green.

Mary that is so sweet,
Bring us to thy Son's feet.

She had three women for her hair,
Two were gloved and shod;
The third had feet and fingers bare,
She was the likest God.

Mary that wieldeth land,
Bring us to thy Son's hand.

She had three women for her ease,
The twain were good women;
The first two were the two Maries,
The third was Magdalen.

Mary that perfect is,
Bring us to thy Son's kiss.

Joseph had three workers in his stall,
To serve him well upon;
The first of them were Peter and Paul,
The third of them was John.

Mary, God's handmaiden,
Bring us to thy Son's ken.

"If your child be none other man's,
But if it be very mine,
The bedstead shall be gold two spans,
The bedfoot silver fine."

Mary that made God mirth,
Bring us to thy Son's birth.

"If the child be some other man's,
And if it be none of mine,
The manager shall be straw two spans,
Betwixen kine and kine."

Mary that made sin cease,
Bring us to thy Son's peace.

Christ was born upon this wise,
It fell on such a night,
Neither with sounds of psalteries,
Nor with fire for light.

Mary that is God's spouse,
Bring us to thy Son's house.

The star came out upon the east
With a great sound and sweet;
Kings gave gold to make him feast
And myrrh for him to eat.

Mary, of thy sweet mood,
Bring us to thy Son's good.

He had two handmaids at his head,
One handmaid at his feet;
The twain of them were fair and red,
The third one was right sweet.

Mary that was most wise,
Bring us to thy Son's eyes.

Eleanor Farjeon, an American, has written this delightful carol called "Six Green Singers," that is brimming with the old medieval spirit:

The frost of the moon fell over my floor
And six green singers stood at my door.

"What do ye here that music make?"
"Let us come in for Christ's sweet Sake."

"Long have ye journeyed in coming here?"
"Our pilgrimage was the length of the year."

"Where do ye make for?" I asked of them.
"Our shrine is a stable in Bethlehem."

"What will ye do as ye go along?"
"Sing to the world in evergreen song."

"What will ye sing for the listening earth?"
"One will sing of a brave-souled Mirth,

"One of the Holiest Mystery,
The Glory of glories shall one song be,

"One of the Memory of things,
One of the Child's imaginings.

"One of our songs is the fadeless Faith,
And all are the Life more mighty than death."

"Ere ye be gone that music make,
Give me an alms for Christ's sweet Sake."

"Six green branches we leave with you;
See they be scattered your house-place through
"The staunch, blithe Holly your board shall grace,
Mistletoe bless your chimney-place,

"Laurel to crown your lighted hall,
Over your bed let the Yew-bough fall,

"Close by the cradle the Christmas Fir,
For elfin dreams in its branches stir,

"Last and loveliest, high and low,
From cell to floor let the Ivy go."

From each glad guest I received my gift
And then the latch of my door did lift—

"Green singers, God prosper the song ye make
As ye sing to the world for Christ's sweet Sake!"

Here is another by an American poet, Lizette Woodworth Reese:

Mary the Mother
Sang to her Son,
In a Bethlehem shed
When the light was done

"Jesus, Jesus,
Little Son, sleep;
The tall kings are gone,
The lads with the sheep.

"Jesus, Jesus,
My bosom is warm;
And Joseph and I
Will keep you from harm"

Mary the Mother
Sang to her Son,
In Bethlehem town
When the light was done

FESTIVE TRIUMPH FOR CHILDREN'S PARTY
(See Recipes Below)

Children Need Parties Too

With all the holiday festivities for grown folks and for older sisters and brothers, it's not strange that the youngest members of the family beg for a party, too!

Children's parties must be colorful, the entertainment simple, and the refreshments very light. If the party is to be a success (and why give one if it isn't?) the activities of the youngsters must be wisely directed from the moment they arrive, until they leave. Choose, to direct the entertainment, the wisest, jolliest, child-loving adult you know. Plan games that are simple, and make sure that all the children are included. Remember, too, that children weary quickly of any one activity, so plan a variety of games and get the new one under way before interest in the old one vanishes.

Party refreshments, of course, must be geared to the age of the guests. If they are very young, it's a good idea to serve the feast at the end of the party, so that it takes the place of the regular evening meal.

Decorate the table with snapping crackers, colored balloons, and peppermint canes to give a really festive setting for the occasion.

Electric Outlets Needed For Kitchen Efficiency

When electric outlets are being planned in a new house for lamps, clocks, and radios, the kitchen is often neglected. In reality, it has more uses for plugs than any other room.

Within reasonable limits, there cannot be too many appliance outlets in the kitchen. In this room electricity is used both for lighting and for motivating power. Consumption of current varies widely with kitchen appliances, and special attention should be given to the load the outlet is expected to carry.

Actual Weight of Germs Determined by Science

Germs are so small that it takes 300,000,000,000 of an average germ to weigh a pound. Under favorable conditions they multiply so rapidly that one germ at the end of a day, would have 16,500,000,000 descendants.

Germs, as seen under the microscope, appear as little round dots, or rod-shaped organisms or as long, slender filaments. They get into the body with food and water, with the air we breathe, through open wounds on the skin, or the bite of an insect. Some germs produce disease by developing a poison which is absorbed by the body. Others break up in the body and the products of their disintegration are poisonous. Sometimes germs float around in clumps of the blood and cause death by developing in overwhelming numbers. Some germs attack certain organs of the body, and so injure them that death results.

Germs pick the places in the body in which they can live best The pneumococcus settles in the lungs and produces pneumonia. It may also infect the eye or the spine. Germs of meningitis nearly always settle on the coverings of the spinal cord and the brain. The typhoid germ settles in the intestines. The germs of hydrophobia and epidemic encephalitis attack the nervous system. The germs of tuberculosis, although preferably entering by way of the lung, may affect any tissue in the body. Thus there is tuberculosis of bones, joints, the eye and the nervous system. The organism that causes syphilis attacks every organ and tissue in the body.

The best preventive for anyone is to keep in such fit condition that infectious disease will not readily attack him. That means eating a suitable diet, getting enough exercise and sunshine, enough rest and cleanliness, including frequent bathing and plenty of soap and water.

'Keep to the Right' Is Early American Saying

Why do Americans drive to the right instead of to the left, as Englishmen and Frenchmen do, and as even Canadians did until the left hand steering wheel on American cars reformed them?

The practice dates from the 1750s, according to researchers of the American Road Builders' association. The driver of the great lumbering Conestoga wagons which came into general use about that time sat on the left wheel horse, the better to use his whip hand on the others of the team when necessary.

When two of these wagons met, therefore, they moved from the middle of the narrow road to the right, so the drivers, sitting on the left side, could be sure the left wheels got safely by. Smaller, lighter vehicles, naturally followed the deep ruts marked by the big freight vans.

These same drivers who so arbitrarily decreed that future generations of American citizens should drive to the right also fathered another familiar American institution. They wanted a long smoke, and a cheap one. Ingenious Pittsburgh tobacconists were quick to oblige. They named their product "Conestogas" and the teamsters carried stocks of them in their boats. That is how stogies were born.

Chinese Radio

Long before radio filled the ether with everything from swing to symphonies the Chinese enjoyed music from the air by attaching melodious whistles to the tails of hundreds of pigeons released over their cities One of these pigeons, outfitted with such whistles, is on exhibition in the Chinese section of the anthropological collections at Field Museum of Natural History. Exhibited with it are various other whistles of the type made from reeds and small gourds and having from two to eight pipes each. Sitting in a garden or riding through the streets of Pieping, one hears these aerial concerts mingled with the calls and sounds of street venders.

She's Whole School

If there were a parent-teacher association in Alba, Calif., Mrs Gladys Peterson would be it. She is principal and teacher at the picturesque little school and also the mother of its only four pupils. She's teacher to David, John, Dolly and Sammy, but in her role of mother she also has Jimmy and Tippy, too young for classes The highest number of pupils she has had is nine, but she had to see them through eight grades and it was quite a job. The schoolhouse, built in the style of the nineties, painted red and featuring a belfry, serves also as a dance hall and branch library.

Malayan Snakes Prove Expensive Zoo Guests

The keepers of the reptile house of the London zoo might well be intoning a new version of the nursery rhyme about the "ten little Injuns," for this is exactly what happened there: Seventy-four Cerberus water snakes arrived at the zoo. The Hamadryads ate 12 of them—now see 62.

The Hamadryad snakes are three in number. Their habitat is Malaya From the first day of their arrival they proved rather expensive to feed. Until the water snakes came they had lived comfortably on a black and gold tree snake apiece a week, but as these reptiles are rare and cost about $20 to $25 each, the Hamadryads' meals proved a strain on event he zoo's resources.

"You see," says a zoo keeper, "we have only three black and gold snakes left now, and they must be kept for show. So we imported these Cerberus water snakes from southeastern Asia as a substitute. They only cost about 10 shillings each if you buy a lot of them, so it is an economy in a way, as three Cerberus snakes go to one black and gold one."

He pointed to the cage in which the new arrivals were crawling happily about oblivious of the fate before them.

"Three of them will be lucky," he said, "as we will keep them for display. The rest will be fed to the Hamadryads at the rate of about six a week, although we will vary the diet occasionally."

Absolutely no pain is involved for the water snakes, however, as the great Hamadryads render each victim unconscious before consuming it

"It is one of those problems we are always being confronted with," the keeper said. "The Hamadryads would starve to death if we didn't give them live food; the Cerberus water snakes, in their natural surroundings, would almost certainly meet a far more unpleasant end. It is happier for all concerned this way."

New Process Produces Coal From Sugar Cane

NEW YORK.—In an emergency, American farmers may grow the country's soft coal in their fields

The fact that fairly good soft coal is now being made from sugars, the carbohydrates of farm crops, was reported to the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers by E Berl, of the Carnegie Institute of Technology.

The sugar coal is too expensive to be practical, but was made to settle an old controversy about the origin of coal and oil.

In the Carnegie laboratories, whose experts include some of the leading scientists of the coal fields, the artificial coal is made in two ways Sugar heated in water at high temperature produces a sandy form of coal.

When weak alkali is added to the water, Berl said, "excellent coking coals" are the result. Adding pressure to the hot sugar water increases the amount of carbon in the man-made coal

These farm-product coals, Berl said, can be treated with hydrogen to make the same products which the Germans and English obtain from "hydrogenated" coal. These products include gasoline and oil for motor cars.

The old idea, said Berl, that coal came from the woody, or lignin, part of plants is as dead as the idea that petroleum is from dead fish. He said that the Carnegie experiments show that coal, oil and bitumen all come from carbohydrates in plants.

Loneliest Lighthouse

Although many seek the job of tending the loneliest lighthouse in the world, that in the Sahara desert, the present tender is the fifth in the beacon's short existence. None has been able to stand the strain of seeing nothing but sand, having no one to talk to and enduring a temperature often more than 140 degrees in the daytime and under 35 degrees at night. According to Cairo reports, one of the first four died of fever, one of thirst and another of gasoline explosion The fourth went insane. The light guides trans-Sahara air and road traffic The only regular visitor operates a supply truck which arrives once a week.

England Keeping Fit

England has a keep-fit movement that is growing daily and may become a challenge to the health and youth parades in other countries of Europe In the county of London alone are more than 100 health centers, where 500 evening health classes are held weekly In these classes 23,000 young men exercise after business hours. As many more youths are having athletic and physical training in other places each evening In some exclusive clubs electrical "horses" and "camels" are ridden. The American game of basketball has caught on and promises to become a body-building rage

Hidden Taxes for Workers

Light.

Thieves hoping to terrorize Sumner homes will have a hard time now that a red police light system has been installed. A red light, connected with the telephone company office, has been placed in front of the town hall. It can be seen in nearly every portion of town When Marshal E. P. Livingston sees the light he merely calls the telephone operator and asks where his presence is desired. Then woe to the thief.

Close Call.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Sitzman awoke in their farm home near LeMars recently to find the house afire, the room was filled with smoke and the stairway landing in flames. He lowered Mrs. Sitzman out the window as far as he could, then let her drop safely to the ground She immediately got a chair and placed it against the wall and caught her children, three years and one year respectively, as Mr Sitzman dropped them into her arms. He then rescued his sister-in-law, Mrs Agatha Nuebel before jumping to safety.

Broken Leg.

Stanley Cairy, of near Mount Vernon, has a broken leg. Anything that happens to Stanley is news, for last February he saved the lives of his mother and sister when both were overcome by carbon monoxide gas while during the family wash. Although only three years old then, he had the presence of mind to run for help. The family lived near Manchester at that time.

Frankincense Comes From Tree Regarded as Sacred

Frankincense comes from a small tree which is tapped through short incisions in the bark The milky juice which then exudes is allowed to dry into gum. This tree was sacred and everything connected with it, the harvesting of the gum, the cultivation of the tree itself, those who handled it—all were governed by religious rites and rules.

The control of this monopoly lay in the city of Shabwa, the ancient capital of the Hadhramaut, says Answers. Then it was a great walled town with 60 temples, and from it led one of the oldest trade routes in the world, from the frankincense country to the markets of Egypt, Syria and Rome.

The great camel caravans skirted the central desert, then turned north to Mecca, and thence to Alexandria, Antioch, and Rome with their precious freight.

There were special store-rooms for the sacred gum, in the temple at Jerusalem; vast quantities were used each year in the temples of Egypt; the Arabs paid it as a tribute to Darius, the Persian; and Alexander the Great sent it as a present to his tutor So valuable was it that men who handled it were stripped before they left their work and searched in case they might have stolen some!

Part of the crop was taken down to the coast and shipped up the Red sea to Egypt. It was the lure of this lucrative trade and the exorbitant rates charged by the Arab shipping princes that persuaded the Romans to build their own fleet on the Red sea and to fight for the command of the eastern seas.

Frankincense is still produced in the Hadhramaut, but there is no longer a world-wide demand for the gum.

Madison First President To Dress in Long Trousers

James Madison was the first President of the United States who habitually dressed in long trousers while he was chief executive. Washington, the elder Adams and Jefferson wore knee breeches during their administrations Trousers, or long pants, were adopted in France in 1789 by the supporters of the revolution. For that reason the revolutionists were known as "sansculottes," which literally means "without breeches," that is, without knee breeches worn by the royalists Many Americans adopted long pants in token of their sympathy with the French revolution Between 1790 and 1800 trousers gradually came into vogue among the common people in America, but it was not until 10 or 12 years later that they were substituted for breeches on dress occasions Although the duke of Wellington is said to have worn trousers in England after the Peninsular campaign, Beau Brummel is usually credited with having popularized trousers in that country.

Care of Orchids

Orchids, after they are cut at the nursery, are placed in refrigerators to harden and become accustomed to a change of temperature. Then, each spray is placed in a water-filled sealed glass tube braced in its box to prevent shifting and crushing, a limited number to a box so that the bloom comes from nursery to florist to you, having experienced only the most careful handling and shipping None of it is accidental From seedling to the day it comes into the possession of some lovely lady, an orchid has been grown with the idea that it can not be too beautiful, too glamorous to suit the purpose for which it is intended and that every woman in the world who longs for an orchid must have the best that can be produced.

The Fountain Pen

The fountain pen was invented three centuries ago. A letter describing a journey made to Paris in 1638 by two Dutchmen has been found at The Hague in Holland. In it they describe what must have been the first fountain pen ever used.

"We saw a man who hath invented a most wondrous device the better thereby to write. He maketh nibs of silver and in the pen he placeth ink which doth not dry, so that without any trouble a man can cover half a sheet of paper without stopping. If the news of his invention were to spread he will soon become wealthy, for everyone will want one. We ourselves have ordered a few."

Oldest Greek Letter Society

Membership in Phi Beta Kappa, the oldest Greek letter society of the American colleges, is purely honorary, and is conferred only on students of high standing in the upper classes. Its name is derived from the initials of three Greek words, "philosophia biou kybernetes"—"philosophy the guide of life." The society was founded at William and Mary college in 1776.

Rich Beggars

Apparently some beggars can be choosers. It is estimated that in New York city alone, $15,000,000 yearly trickles into the hands of 16,000 beggars Begging is one of the oldest professions It is said that 200 years ago an Englishman by the name of Carew amassed $150,000 during a 30-year period of begging under countless disguises.

Family Ties Mean Nothing To Cold-Blooded Reptiles

A snake is cold-blooded in every sense of the word. Family ties mean nothing. If the young hatch from eggs, they are left to come out all by themselves. If they are born in a litter of from 5 to 50 infinitesimal ribbons, they must wriggle through the school of experience alone.

Most of the snake gentry hereabouts are very handsomely patterned The ringnecked snake for example, is a shiny bluish black with bright yellow underparts and a brilliant orange ring around his neck The pilot black snake has a black velvet skin The ribbon snake would make a pretty fancy ribbon, with his slender dark body and three long yellow stripes The green snake is as green as grass and the queen snake, which is found only in water has nice chocolate brown stripes The storer's or red-bellied burrowing snake is very small and gray with bright red decorations.

Each one has a personality of his own. Some are very mysterious and secretive, preferring to lead private lives under stones, bark or logs. Others move freely in the open fields. Some are happiest around water or living in marshes and swamps. Tree climbers like the pilot blaok snake haunt the heavy woods.

Panama City and Colon in Existence Before the Canal

Cristobal, Canal Zone, Atlantic port of entry to a strip of leased territory across the narrow part of the Republic of Panama, is the gateway to a scene that dates back through the centuries. Panama City and Colon, ancient and colorful, and Cristobal and Balboa, modern and military, are easily available to the Caribbean traveler.

Panama City and Colon are not outgrowths of the accomplishment of the canal They are cities founded four centuries ago, the terminals of a paved causeway built to carry the unrecorded riches of the conquistadores, with a legend of pirates, buccaneers, and the freebooters of the Spanish Main. A virtual kaleidoscope of nations, they owe their atmosphere to a commerce that dates back to the Fifteenth century. The parade of nations began with the Spaniards and Negro slaves, Inca chiefs and native Indians and was carried on by the English buccaneers, the French corsairs, the forty-niners, Hindus, Chinese and Arabs. Descendants of these early merchants pass through the streets today.

Dead Letter Office

The dead letter office dates from 1825 An act of congress made it the duty of postmasters to publish quarterly, or oftener, as the postmaster general might direct, a list of letters remaining in their offices, and once every quarter to forward those that could not be delivered to the department at Washington Every year about 20,000,000 pieces of mail matter are received by the post office so carelessly addressed that they can not be delivered These are sent to the dead letter office, where, by means of maps and directories, skilled clerks are able to guess correctly the destinations of about one-half the items Currency, checks, and money orders amounting to more than $1,000,000 a year are received Merchandise which can not be delivered or returned to the sender is sold at auction, letters are burned, and thousands of magazines, picture cards, and valentines are sent to hospitals

Nests of Thoughts

Make yourself nests of pleasant thoughts! None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity; bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure-houses of precious and restful thoughts, which care cannot disturb, nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us; houses built without hands, for our souls to live in.—John Ruskin.

Tungsten and Zinc in Steel

Tungsten is an alloy that gives hardness and toughness to steel. Among the uses of such steels are high speed cutting tools and magnets About 10 per cent of all tungsten is produced in the United States. Domestic consumption is double domestic production The domestic output is augmented by imports from China and British Malaya. The corrosion resistance that is imparted to steel by zinc is an important property in galvanized products. Steel manufacturers do not have to depend on foreign sources for any zinc. The consumption of zinc in the United States is approximately equal to domestic production.

Tantalum

Tantalum is rarer than gold in the earth's crust. It was discovered in 1802, but was not used for a century. In 1903 to 1911 it was used for incandescent bulb filaments, but was later displaced by tungsten. It is remarkably resistant to acid corrosion. The world's supply of tantalum ore has come almost exclusively from Australia. Small shipments have been made from Africa and South America.

AN APPLE A BARREL

"How much cider did you make this year?" inquired one farmer of another who had offered him a sample for trial.

"Fifteen bar'ls," was the answer.

The first man took another sip. "I reckon, Si," he drawled, "ef you'd had another apple you might ha' made another bar'l."

On His Guard

"I see you always wear a smiling countenance."

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, a little wearily. "I have to. There is no telling what moment the candid camera might turn up."

lero and Princess Types Compete for Style Prestige

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

NO MATTER the elegance of fabric, no matter the color glory of the material, no matter the perfection of detail, no matter whether it cost a plenty or less if your dress or your coat or your suit be not figure flattering then all is lost insofar as allure or smart appearance is concerned. Yes, indeed, we are hearing a lot these days about "lines" and "hips," wasp waistlines and the new corseted silhouettes.

From the figure-flattering standpoint there are two types that stand out definitely in the mode this season, namely the bolero costume and the form-fitting dresses and coats that are cut a la princess. The difference between the two is that the dress or suit with a bolero possesses the magic to make figures that are not a hundred per cent perfect look up to par, while to wear a princess successfully one really must have a good figure.

If in doubt, there is no safer, saner choice than a bolero ensemble. To define the bolero theme is a big order, for it expresses itself in infinite moods ranging from tailored types made of utilitarian wools to afternoon types starred with sequins or more or less embroidered even unto whimsical affairs that are all aglitter with jeweled embroidery, ostrich trim, filmy lace that tones to formal evening wear.

Most practical is the tailored bolero dress or suit made of a sheer wool weave or of a silk-and-rayon crepe, or of the now-so-smart faille or bengaline. Such a dress-with-bolero or skirt and bolero will prove the better part of a wardrobe within itself. You can wear different blouses and change the entire appearance of your costume from day to day. The suit may be simply tailored or the bolero can be handsomely all-over braided.

At the smartest places you see bolero costumes similar to the model pictured to the left in the group. Sheer wool or silk crepe in a chosen pastel tone, a skirt rippling to a wide swirling hemline, a blouse that looks like a froth of tinted lace, a bolero that bespeaks youth in its every line thus the story of this charming costume is told. The lace blouse worn with this bolero twosome reminds us that the foreword coming from fashion headquarters is that the dainty lace-trimmed or all-of-lace blouse is scheduled to reach a new high in fashion next spring.

Princess coats and dresses are all the style this winter. In coats the classic double-breasted form-fitting princess type of wool coating or richly colorful tweed is an acknowledged favorite. As to the princess dress, style-alert debutantes and girls of high school age have fallen in love with the simple classic such as is centered in the illustration. Describing this model, it is a black bengaline coat dress, suitable to wear from morn to night. The form-fitting princess lines are cut with purpose to achieve the chic skirt fullness that develops a wide flaring hemline. The dress is further styled with sailor collar and a row of gold buttons at the front closing.

If you are young, slim, svelte and alertly fashion-conscious, tie a ribbon in your hair and wear a form-fitting princess dress like the one pictured to the right in the group. Buttons down the front make this model do the most for the typical junior figure. The gored, hemmed skirt flares gaily. And the four little embroidered and edged in val-type cotton lace pockets!

Sequin-Trimmed

Sequins flash at you from the most unexpected places this season, the latest idea being to trim the black jersey frock in glittering bands done in white and gold sequins as you see pictured. The gown has the new long sleeves, a high neck and open back that buttons only at neckline and waistline. These new "coverup" fashions are the smartest of the season. Note that the fullness is brought to the front in the skirt.

Call for Glitter Brings Up Metals

In harmony with the call for glitter in fashions this winter is the return to favor of metal weaves for dinner gowns for cocktail frocks, and especially smart is the blouse of rich lame to be worn with the velvet afternoon suit or with the long formal skirt at evening functions.

Milliners report a big demand for exotic looking turbans of metal cloth draped in oriental fashion, these to match the gowns or blouses or jackets with which they are worn. These flattering turbans look stunning with winter furs and women who like to dress for occasion are playing up the idea of the metal-draped turban for all it is worth.

Metal jackets that button with jeweled buttons are definitely good style for evening worn with the black velvet or crepe formal skirt.

Bright Red Leads The Color Parade

Bright red triumphs in the color realm. Bright red for your hat, your scarf, and a spectacular turn of affairs is bright red gloves worn with your dark furs.

Bright red jackets top dark skirts day and evening, the more formal ones scintillating with glittering embroidery. Young girls love the new long red capes or coats if you prefer, that are so swank for evening wear. Sometimes brass buttons add to their glory.

Corduroy and Wool

Bright corduroy and printed wool are combined in a comfortable ankle-length dinner dress for informal dining at home.

Mantlet

Mantlet is the newest name for the waist length evening jackets of fur with attached hoods.

Sick Children Need 'Natural' Parental Care

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

ONE of the excuses made for a boy or girl of 'teen age who is selfish, rude, ill behaved, lacks courage, or demands his own way, is that he was a weak child or had had many illnesses.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

It is only natural that when a youngster is sick, his family, particularly the mother, is likely to be over careful of him. She is continually about him, arranging his pillows, shading the sun or lights, asking him his wants, and in various ways making him feel how important he is to her. It is not any wonder then that should he be delicate or be attacked by a number of children's ailments, he takes advantage of the mistaken kindness of the household. Even between attacks of illness he expects the same "kind" treatment.

Dr. Barton

Some very sensible advice is given to parents and others by Elizabeth Cotton, Huntsville, Texas, in Hygeia, the health magazine.

"Even though special care is necessary, a child should be treated as naturally as possible during an illness and particularly when he is out of bed and recovering from the illness."

The surroundings of the child during illness should be such that he does not become unduly nervous and upset. The sick child as well as the sick adult needs to be let alone. He should not be constantly questioned concerning what he wants or how he feels. Neither should he be allowed to get the idea that being ill is a privilege because of the undue attention he receives.

Rest Is Necessary.

From the physical standpoint, when the child is getting better it is important not to let him damage his heart by being up on his feet too much and too soon. This makes it hard for the parent or nurse because the child has been "quiet" so long he is naturally anxious to get up and play.

"Many children are injured permanently because they are allowed to return to school too soon after an illness. No child should be out of bed following such illness as rheumatic fever, tonsillitis, scarlet fever, diphtheria, or whooping cough until his temperature is normal for 24 to 48 hours."

Ulcers May Result From Nervousness

IN MY student days we used to make up tables of the symptoms of the various diseases of an organ—stomach, heart, kidneys—and tried to remember which of these symptoms were found in each disease. Thus in diseases of the stomach—ulcer, cancer, chronic inflammation—we thought of the pain, presence, absence and amount of gastric juice, appearance of the face and other symptoms.

What we did not know in former days and what we are rapidly learning now is that many ailments are due to the general makeup—nervous and emotional—of the individual, and that it is this makeup which brings on symptons.

Thus Dr. T. Grier Miller, Philadelphia, in Virginia Medical Monthly, says:

"Ulcer can no longer be regarded as a local disease of the stomach or intestine. The modern physician must concern himself with the person who has the ulcer, with his heredity, with his physical, mental and emotional makeup, with his surroundings and social standing and with his personal habits of life."

Tendency Toward Ulcers.

This does not mean that the high-strung, nervous, emotional individual is bound to develop stomach ulcer, but that he is more likely to do so when he is attacked by infection or eats the wrong kinds of food.

Drs. Clarence F. G. Brown, Chicago, and Ralph E. Dolkhart, Boston, in the Journal of the American Medical Association state that the investigation of 1,500 cases where ulcer returned after having healed showed that in order of importance the causes were, (1) nervousness, including fatigue and anxiety, (2) acute infection such as a cold, infected sinus, abscessed tooth, or acute indigestion, and (3) the things put in the stomach—coarse foods, highly seasoned foods, hot bread, seedy vegetables and fruits, fruit cakes and puddings, cucumbers, radishes, olives and celery.

It is well to remember, then, that while infection and wrong foods may be the immediate cause of, or return of, the ulcer of the stomach or intestine, nervousness and anxiety prepare the soil or tissue that grows or develops the ulcer.

FARM TENANTS BETTER STATUS

Written Lease Proves Value As Stabilizer.

The Farm Security administration's national survey of the progress of farm families it is assisting shows that those renting their farms are making decided headway in their tenure status.

In the past, more than 80 per cent of farm renters operated under oral leases. But 81 per cent of the 161,395 tenants in the FSA rehabilitation program covered by the survey have written leases. These tend to stabilize them on their farms, and make it possible for them to plan ahead.

Many of these written leases are based on the Farm Security administration's flexible lease providing for arbitration of disputes between landlord and tenant, reimbursing the tenant for permanent improvements, and other features of benefit both to landowner and tenant.

More than 40,000 of the FSA tenants have written leases providing for more than one year of tenure, which encourage balanced live stock and cropping programs to conserve the soil instead of "quick cash" and soil-depleting crops which tend to go along with short tenure.

The survey showed that during the past year 26,800 of the families had made a difficult step up the economic ladder by advancing from sharecroppers to tenants. In addition, under the Bankhead-Jones act, the FSA has made loans to almost 7,000 tenants for the purchase of farms of their own.

Misbehaving Streams Take Toll in Lowland

Misbehaving streams cause an enormous amount of damage to fertile bottom-land farms, according to the soil conservation service. Sometimes these streams wander out of their courses and cut new channels across fields and pastures; or they undercut the banks and eat back into valuable farmland or overtop the banks and leave heavy deposits of sand on unharvested crops.

At sharp bends streams are particularly likely to kick over the traces. At the outside of the bend where the thrust of the flowing water is greatest they usually gnaw away at the bank. On the inside they often deposit soil matter washed down from farther upstream. In this way, a gravel bar is sometimes built up on the inside of the bend which tends to "shove" the stream farther toward the outside bank and increase the cutting on that side.

As a part of its demonstration program of erosion control, the soil conservation service is helping many farmers make these streams behave. On the outside bend of a stream where a considerable amount of cutting has occurred, service engineers assist in building structures, such as jetties, which divert the flow away from the damaged area and give protective vegetation a chance to become established. Such trees as osier, willow, or dogwood are recommended for permanent protection.

Urges Safety of Water Supplies in Rural Areas

Public health can be bought, especially in regard to the safety and purity of rural water supplies, according to Robert Newton Clark, district engineer of the New York state department of health.

"It can be bought," he said, "either by the use of money, time, or intelligence." He pointed out that the rural situation differs from that in the city; city water, used in great volume, is treated. In the country the use of home water supplies is not so managed.

"The clearest, coldest, tastiest glass of water may harbor death. In many instances the risk is unwarranted."

He referred to the many chances for contamination of water supplies and how pollution may result. The simplest way to sterilize a well, he said, is to use a chlorine compound, liquid bleaching solutions, or similar laundry bleaches. From one to four ounces are added to a pail of water and introduced into the water supply.

Then, enough water should be pumped or drawn from the system so that a distinct chlorine odor is noticeable at the tap or pump After this, no water is drawn for a few hours, which gives the chlorine a chance to kill objectionable organisms.

Grinding Farm Tools

Edged tools in the farm workshop can work satisfactorily only when properly ground The angle at which to grind a cold chisel depends on the hardness of the metal on which it is to be used; the softer the metal, the keener the edge. A templet consisting of a piece of tin with a guide notch, one-half inch wide and three-eighths inch deep, will help in determining the correct angle. Chisels ground to fit such a notch will be well suited for general work

The greatest salvage job in history, to which the British navy devoted eight years, making more than 5,000 dives, was the recovery of $24,800,000 worth of gold from the wreck of the White Star liner Laurentic, which struck a mine and sank in 120 feet of water off the north Irish coast in 1917.

Public Safety Department Warns To Use Extra Precaution In Winter

FEW SUGGESTIONS ON HOW TO DRIVE CAREFULLY

Rules For Driving In Winter Compiled By Chief C. A. Knee

DES MOINES—With the arrival of real winter weather in Iowa, the Iowa department of public safety, this week issued a set of winter driving suggestions by which motorists may reduce the danger of serious accidents on slippery highways.

Here are the suggestions, based on the experience of the state highway safety patrol, and compiled by Chief C. A. Knee:

If you start to skid, turn your front wheels in the direction in which rear wheels are skidding

If roads are partly clear, beware of possible ice or snow spots under trees, beside buildings, over bridges, and over the crests of north-sloping hills.

Never brake harply on slippery paving. Apply brakes gradually, and brake intermittently, not steadily.

In fog or heavy snowstorm drive with your dimmers, not your bright lights.

Keep an ample distance behind the car ahead of you, so you can be sure to stop if the other car skids or smashes up

Be sure your windshield wipers are working properly, and that your brakes are evenly adjusted, before starting on a trip.

To start a car on slippery paving, start in second gear and release the clutch gradually.

If you drive with windows closed have your muffler checked, to be sure there are no leaks which will let dangerous fumes into the car

"Drive as you walk—more slowly and carefully on slippery paving, and you will be a lot safer", says the patrol chief.

Ancient Splinter.

Wilbur Benedict, farmer of near Casey, has added to his collection of antiques, a piece of wood believed to be 30,000 years old The wood, thought to be tamarac, was found in blue clay at a depth of 90 feet during the digging of a well. As the blue clay is known to geologists as the Nebraska drift and was deposited during the first glacial period, Benedict estimates that the wood is at least 30,000 years old.

It Was Goodell's Turn Again!

GOODELL SHOWS SHAMROCKS HOW BASKETBALL GAMES ARE WON

Little Shamrocks Win Over Goodell Reserves In Opener

It was Goodell's turn to win the annual feud between the Klemme Shamrocks and their southern neighbors, and they did with a vengeance here Friday night. The score was 23 to 18 Five straight set-backs in the past two years had made Coach Freeman's quintet hungry for victory, so they satisfied their appetites with a five-point winning margin, about as much as is ever allowed in a Klemme-Goodell game

The first half was a typical inter-city battle There was never more than two points difference in the score, and the lead changed often The Shamrocks left the floor at the half time with a 10 to 9 lead and looked like the better team up to that point. Goodell grabbed a lead early in the second half, however, and guarded it carefully for the remainder of the game. Boller, Peterson, and Carolus continued the sharp- shooting which made them the high point men of the game, and the local boys were unable to close the gap.

Scoring was well distributed on both teams Boller was high point man of the game with seven, and Peterson and Carolus each got six Buseman collected five points for Klemme, while Grosshuesch, Stille and Grange each got four.

Little Shamrocks Winners

In the preliminary game, the local second team had better luck and turned in a 16 to 12 victory Coobs, with eight points, Beck, with five, and Jacobs, with three, did all the scoring for the locals D. Boller was high man for the visitors with six points.

Quaaltagh Is One of the Oldest of British Festivals

Quaaltagh is seldom heard of in England, but is one of the oldest British festivals. It is observed in parts of the Isle of Man, where customs similar to "first-footing" in Scotland are kept up, says Tit-Bits Men go from house to house singing special festival songs, and are invited in for a bite and a drink. Always, dark men go first.

But there are one or two customs in connection with Quaaltagh which are observed nowhere else. Before midnight the floor of the kitchen is swept, always starting at the door and sweeping to the hearth, otherwise good luck will be swept out. Before retiring, the ashes are taken from the fire and smoothed over the hearth with a pair of tongs, and in the morning the housewife looks eagerly at the ashes for tracks of a human foot. If there is one and the toes point to the door, it means death for one in the house; if the footprint is reversed, it means the birth of a child.

Sardine Varieties

All sardines are small fishes of the herring family. In California the variety used is the California sardine (Sardinia coerulea); in Maine, the sea herring (Clupea harengus); in France and Portugal, the pilchard (Clupea pilchardus), and in Norway, the sprat (Clupea sprattus). The name is derived from that of the island of Sardinia, in the Mediterranean, around whose coasts the fish was first caught in quantity. The Americana states that the name is a general one applied to various small fishes of the family Clupeidae, as well as, and less correctly, to the young of some of the larger species. The usual French sardine is the yearling fish of what becomes, when full grown, the pilchard, 8 to 10 inches long. The large California sardine is also a true sardine, but in the Maine sardine industry, the young of the sea herring are packed.

One Hundred Years Ago 'Old Hickory' Revisited the Scene of His Triumph Over the 'Red Coats' at New Orleans

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WHEN members of the Democratic party all over the United States gather together at their annual Jackson day dinners this year, they may well point to a celebration which took place just 100 years ago as the precedent for their making the anniversary of a great American military victory the occasion for a political rally. For January 8, 1840, marked the climax of a 10-day celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans and the honor guest there was the hero of that battle—Ex-President Andrew Jackson.

It came about in this manner: During his second administration "Old Hickory" had decided that Martin Van Buren, his vice president, should be his successor in the White House and, despite a revolt within the party, forced the nomination of the New Yorker and aided in his election. But Van Buren's term as President was not a happy one for either him or for his friend and counselor, the ex-President.

Within a year after he took office, the speculative craze which had swept the country brought the inevitable result—the panic of 1837. Jackson's financial policies were blamed (and wrongly, so the later historians assure us) for the disaster but since he was no longer in the White House the anger of men who had seen their fortunes go crashing down in ruins was turned against his "hand-picked successor," Martin Van Buren.

By 1839 business conditions had improved somewhat but not enough to reassure Van Buren that he could again defeat William Henry Harrison, the Whig candidate, and serve a second term. When congress convened, it quickly passed an independent treasury bill, taking the fiscal affairs out of the hands of the banks and completing the work which Jackson had commenced back in 1829. By now the country had begun to realize that "Old Hickory's" financial policies were sound and his popularity, which had waned during the panic years of 1837-38, began to revive and give renewed confidence to Van Buren and his colleagues in the Democratic administration.

'Come to the Aid of the Party.'

Down in New Orleans the Louisianians began planning a formal observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans and President Van Buren, believing that the presence of General Jackson at that celebration would aid the cause of Democracy, wrote to him asking him to go. Much as Jackson would enjoy revisiting the scene of his triumph, there were several reasons, however, which might prevent his going. He was a tired, old man now. "Old Hickory" they still called him, but age had weakened the tough fiber which that name suggested. Such a journey and the excitement of the celebration would drain him of much of the strength he still had left.

Then there was another reason. The General had lost one of his best friends, one upon whom he had come to depend greatly. That was Ralph E. W. Earle, the wandering portrait painter, who had come to the Hermitage 17 years before and found there the only home he had ever known. Earle died in September, 1838, and the gray head of the general bowed a little lower after that date. "He was my constant companion when I traveled. Had I a wish to travel I have now no one to go with me," he said mournfully.

But the most important reason why such a trip was doubtful is suggested in a letter he wrote to a friend at about this time—"Again I am out of funds, and I cannot bear to borrow or travel as a pauper." When Andrew Jackson went to Washington to become President, he carried $5,000 with him. When, at the end of eight years, he returned to his home in Tennessee there was only $90 left of it.

An Expensive Son.

Then came the panic years and "Old Hickory" was hard put to it to remain solvent. His difficulties were increased by the unbusinesslike practices of his adopted son, Andrew Jackson Jr. He prevailed upon his foster father to allow him to buy a 1,100-acre plantation in Mississippi for which he agreed to pay $23,700 in four yearly installments. On his way home from making this deal, young Jackson stopped at Nashville and, unknown to his father, bought an expensive piano, also on the installment plan.

ANDREW JACKSON IN 1840

This portrait was painted by Jacques J. Amans during "Old Hickory's" visit to New Orleans to join in the 25th anniversary celebration of his victory over the British there on January 8, 1815. The original hangs in the Brown University library, Providence, R. I. (From an illustration in Marquis James' "Andrew Jackson, Portrait of a President," published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, by whose courtesy it is reproduced here.)

Nor was this his only extravagance, for while Jackson was making plans for the journey to New Orleans he received a letter from his old friend, Maj. William B. Lewis, asking that a note for $550, signed by young Jackson and already two years overdue, be paid. This money had been used to buy a carriage and Andrew Jr. had assured his father that the money had already been repaid.

"I have exerted all my means to clear my son from his foolish as well as useless debts. They are all exhausted, I can do no more," the General wrote to Lewis. By this time he had about given up his plans for going to New Orleans. Then came a crushing blow.

It was the financial collapse of Albert Ward, a son of one of Jackson's old friends and one of the richest men in Middle Tennessee. When his creditors began securing writs of attachment against those who had gone security for Ward it was learned that Andrew Jackson Jr. was one of his principal sureties. Moreover, as the panicky creditors began to press their claims, other debts which young Jackson had contracted, unknown to his father, came to light.

ANDREW JACKSON JR.

A portrait of Jackson's adopted son by Ralph E. W. Earle, owned by the Ladies' Hermitage Association, Nashville, Tenn., and reproduced in Marquis James' "Andrew Jackson, Portrait of a President."

"Old Hickory," tired and ill as he was, rose superbly to the occasion. First he made certain arrangements with the Ward creditors in order to gain time. Then he decided definitely to go to New Orleans.

"If the trip should help the prospects of the Democrats, well and g o o d;" writes Marquis James in his "Andrew Jackson—Portrait of a President," "The real object was to relieve his son.

"The time was short. On December 23 the General drove to Nashville and drew in advance on his cotton. After paying two notes for young Andrew and a few other bills only enough remained for traveling expenses to New Orleans. So he borrowed $3,000 which was placed to the credit of his son.

"On the day before Christmas Andrew Jr. had not returned from Mississippi. Jackson could delay his departure no longer. Scratching directions to the boy to pay the Lewis note and other debts to the extent of $3,000, Old Hickory was off for Louisiana to make his first public appearance in nearly three years."

A Near-Tragic Journey.

Concerning that near-tragic journey and its results, James also writes:

"New Year's day of 1840 was spent aboard an Ohio river packet menaced by drifting ice. At Memphis Jackson obtained from Albert Ward pledges which he hoped would balance Andrew Jr.'s obligations to the Ward creditors . . .

"On January 4, the steamer Vicksburg, chartered by the state of Mississippi and loaded with notables, took the General aboard. What followed was a nightmare. Stricken with a hemorrhage which made every breath torture, the veteran drummed out the last reserves of his will-power 'determined to go through (with the journey) or fall in the struggle.'

" 'I have found that complaining never eased pain,' he said. The endless receptions, the speeches, the pageantry, the fireworks, the shouting, were somehow endured for 10 days and nights. Leaning on his cane, the chieftain slowly mounted the mouldering ridge that had been the rampart beside the Rodriquez canal. Dim old eyes looked on a level field of cane stubble . . . which memory may have peopled with pulsing platoons in red tunics latticed by white crossbelts . . . hedges of bayonets receding into infinity . . ."

Thus did the "Hero of New Orleans" look upon the scene of his triumph a quarter of a century earlier where he had won that amazing victory with which, in the words of another biographer (Gerald W. Johnson in his "Andrew Jackson—An Epic in Homespun"), he had "saved the self-respect of the country." Because of it that country was "literally crazed with joy and in its delirium flung the name of Andrew Jackson against the stars."

A Hero Goes Home.

After the 10-day celebration was over Jackson started for his home in Tennessee. "Alone in the cabin of a homeward bound steamer, the pain passed and a feeling of peace filled the heart of the soldier," writes James, "He hoped he had done something to save Mr. Van Buren. In any event he believed he had saved Andrew."

As it turned out, both hopes were vain. For in the tumultuous "log cabin and hard cider" campaign that year the "singing Whigs" with their shouts of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too!" and "Van, Van is a used-up man!" swept the "Little Magician" out of the White House and installed "Old Tippecanoe" Harrison there in his place.

As for Andrew, it is true that his foster father "saved" him—but only temporarily. For the young man seems to have had a perfect genius for bad business practices and before the weary old General had laid down his burdens on June 8, 1845—five years and six months, to a day, after his triumphant return to New Orleans—those burdens had been added to, by his foster son, to the extent of $24,000

As Andrew Jackson, returning to New Orleans in 1840 experienced the "endless receptions, speeches, pageantry, fireworks" etc., one wonders if, perhaps, he remembered the reception that had been given him by that city immediately after his victory 25 years before—and, remembering, smiled inwardly at the recollection of what followed so soon afterwards! That reception is described in the first of Marquis James' two-volume biography, "Andrew Jackson, the Border Captain" as follows:

". . . The city gave him a Latin welcome. Pierre Favrot, seated by a window overlooking the Place d'Armes, undertook to describe it to his wife Never my dear have I seen such a crowd . . . All the troops arriving to the strains of military music & of the cannons . . . more than 12,000 people of whom 8,000 were armed . . . Tomorrow they . . . will crown the General; twelve young girls will strew his path with flowers . . .' "

This they did on the morrow, and much more. "At the door of the church he was received by the Abbe DuBourg in his robes of office and attended by a college of priests . . . The choir began to chant the majestic lines of the Te Deum. The people in the church took up the hymn. It spread to the lips of the throng that filled the square as all New Orleans poured forth its gratitude for deliverance."

Short-Lived Gratitude.

But that gratitude was short-lived, and the hero of yesterday was, in their minds, a tyrant the next day, when "New Orleans awakened somewhat amazed to find itself, to all intents, once more in a state of siege. The tight restrictions of martial law were reimposed. Militia companies which had looked forward to prompt disbandment were marched into camps and set to drilling. Reserve companies not under arms before because there were no arms to give them were called out, the dilatory cargo of War department rifles having arrived. Andrew Jackson expected his victory to have bearing on the tedious negotiations he assumed to be in progress at Ghent, but he took no chances."

As rumors that a treaty of peace had indeed been signed began to drift into the city, the dissatisfaction with Jackson's restrictions on the citizens of New Orleans and the resentment of the volunteers and the militia against being kept under arms increased. There were frequent desertions and finally open mutiny. To deal with both, Jackson used the same iron hand with which he had ruled his soldiers during the campaign against the Creek Indians. This brought him into a collision with the civil authorities.

Clash With Civil Authority.

Federal Judge Dominick A. Hall was determined to establish the fact that a writ of habeas corpus issued in his court should not be superseded by the rules of martial law. Jackson had not only dared to disregard such a writ but had arrested Hall for "aiding, abetting and exciting mutiny within my camp" and locking him up. Freed when martial law was revoked at the receipt of the news of the peace treaty, Hall had mounted the bench again, issuing a summons directing Jackson to show cause why he should not be held in contempt of court for his refusal to recognize the writ of habeas corpus.

So it came to pass that late in March, 1815, the "Hero of New Orleans" stood before the bar of civil justice and heard Judge Hall impose upon him a fine of $1,000 and costs but refrain from including imprisonment in the sentence because it "was impossible to forget the important services of the defendant to the country." After that "Jackson walked out of the court-room the idol of the cheering crowd. They unhitched the horses and dragged his carriage to the Exchange Coffee House."

The idol of New Orleans he remained until his departure in May for his home in Tennessee. That departure "was taken in triumph—public farewells, private leave-takings, exchanges of costly gifts. A purse was raised to discharge the fine imposed by Dominick Hall, but Andrew Jackson waved it aside, requesting that the money be distributed among the families of soldiers who had fallen in battle."

Lovely Basic Dress Will Slenderize One

IT'S safe to predict that you've never worn a more truly becoming dress than this lovely, basic fashion (1878-B). It is beautifully designed to make your figure look slender and softly rounded. The front panels of the bodice are cut in one with the skirt, accenting height. Gathers at the side of the bodice take care of becoming bust fullness.

The only trimming is a row of buttons down the front. The vneckline is a perfect background for your pet jewelry. Those sash ends in the back may be tied in a flat bow, or to simulate a bustle. Velvet, wool broadcloth and flat crepe are materials in which this design makes up particularly well. You'll wear it with pride on important afternoon occasions. A step-by-step sew chart accompanies your pattern.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1878-B is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires 4⅝ yards of 39-inch material for three-quarter sleeves; 4⅝ yards for long sleeves; 4⅛ yards for short.

FIRST ROBIN IN 1940 . . .

Orville Stokesbary reported the last robin in 1939 when he saw a robin on December 23rd. But Eckard Zeidler wins the honors for having seen and reported the first robin in 1940. Mr. and Mrs. Zeiller saw a robin on January 3rd and have seen the bird several times since.

And now comes Jack Etchen who says a robin stays around his house and he sees him nearly every day! But Jack did not report to us until January 5th, so Eckard gets the fur-lined trophy.

One of the young men of this community stepped out Saturday night and it was rather late when he returned. . . only to find that he did not have his door key with him! He did not want to awaken the household, for several reasons, so hunted up a ladder and leaned it against the house to gain entrance through the bath room window. All looked fine, except that a rung broke out of the ladder and nearly spilled the young man on the frozen ground below. He gained his room, but was dumbfounded next morning when his method of entrance was discovered . . . because of the dirty tracks on the bath room floor!

LIGHT NEEDED IN THE KLEMME PARK . . .

It has been brought to the attention of this department with the suggestion that it be passed on to the attention of whoever might be in charge . . that a light should again be placed in the band stand in the park. At one time there was a light in the band stand that went on and off with the street lights.

Now that the new school is used a great deal at night, many people walk through the park on their way to and from the school at night. The park is dark and the walks are hard to see at night. Perhaps the powers that be, will have this attended to and which will be greatly appreciated by many tax payers.

Horses Said to Have Excellent Imaginations

The actual intelligence of a horse is limited, says Arthur J. Sarl, noted British racing expert, in "Horses, Jockeys and Crooks: Reminiscences of Thirty Years' Racing." Thoroughbreds are endowed with more brains than cart or farm horses, light or heavy drafts, but most big horses seem to have more "savvy" than the little fellows.

All horses have good memories, Mr. Sarl says.

"Perhaps you have wondered why some horses prefer certain courses. Nine times out of ten you can take it that these horses gained some pleasurable experience at that particular venue," he explains. "Maybe they won their race and were patted and fussed over by their trainer or jockey; given an apple, a lump of sugar . . . They can tell good treatment from bad, which accounts for their like and dislike of certain people.

"Horses have great imagination. They magnify everything and become bewildered. They are susceptible to fear. That is why they readily accept the idea of man's superiority. They have a wonderful sense of smell."

Mr. Sarl has seen an animal fall on two occasions at the same fence, with several months between falls.

"The horse remembers the incident, and fear enters into his heart as he approaches the obstacle at the next time of asking," he believes. "His memory of persons, objects and places causes him to have misgivings."

"And doesn't it apply to us humans as well?" Mr. Sarl asks. "What about the boxer who again meets an opponent who has already given him a hiding? It is always odds on the fellow who has done the trick."

London Museum Obtains Old Romanesque Window

Recent acquisitions of the Victoria and Albert museum in London include several notable pieces of sculpture and stained glass. Most important single item is the French Romanesque triple window of stone, which was purchased with the help of a generous contribution from the National Art-Collections fund and erected in the east hall of the museum near the main entrance, says the Times, of London. This window was discovered not long ago during the demolition of an old house close to the Cathedral of Trie Chateau, near Gisors, about 30 kilometers from Beauvais. It consists of three rounded arches, supported on columns with capitals of a late Romanesque character.

Inside each arch is a tympanum with two small pointed arches containing carvings of strange beasts (such as birds with human heads), sirens, and a centaur drawing his bow against a basilisk. The great delicacy of its decoration, especially on the capitals, suggests that the work dates from the end of the Romanesque period, probably from the last part of the Twelfth century.

Among other pieces of sculpture are a Sixteenth century Florentine terra-cotta figure of a reclining woman, thought to be an allegorical representation of history, and ascribed to Giovanni Bologna and the terra-cotta sketch model by J. M. Rysbrack (1693-1770), for the reclining figure of Sir Isaac Newton on his monument in Westminster abbey. The monument itself, erected in 1731, was designed by William Kent, but the figures on it were the work of Rysbrack.

Volcanic Island

A pear-shaped dab of land in the curving island chain that dots and dashes the seas between the Americas, St. Lucia was created by volcanic action, says the National Geographic society. Scenically, it is among the handsomest of the West Indies, with its great mass of mountains, about whose summits drifts a gentle mantle of mist that belies St Lucia's often violent history. Believed to have been discovered by Columbus in 1502, and named for the martyred St. Lucy, burned at the stake, St. Lucia was for centuries drenched in blood. The first two English settlements of 1605 and 1638 were wiped out by Carib natives French colonists were able to make peace with the natives, but not with the English, who returned in 1663 and again took the island.

Electric Slaughter

Australia has evolved a new and more humane way of slaughtering animals for market. It is an electric "stunner." So far it has been used for pigs, and has proved more economical than killing by hand. The "stunner" is placed over the ears of the animals which are immediately rendered unconscious for 10 minutes. Meantime they are slaughtered and the hair is removed by another new machine in about three minutes, instead of half an hour, as is sometimes required

Ancient Institution

Chain stores, contrary to popular belief, are not ne winstitutions in the world's economy As long ago as 200 years before Christ the Chinese enjoyed their benefits The Fuggers, of Germany, and the Merchant Adventurers, of England, operated chains in the Middle ages. The first chain system in America was founded in 1670 by Hudson's Bay company.

Own Your Own HOME!

Starting 1940, the Government has put into effect "Title 3". This makes it very easy for anyone who can pay rent to get on with owning a home for themselves.

F. H. A. Homes ARE ALRIGHT!

F. H. A. protects the home builder. He gets what he pays for and the F. H. A. checks on the construction and material at different times during erection. The "red tape" is all "hooey". If you have the initial down payment, which under the new ruling is as low as 5 per cent, or if you have a lot, this can be used as your equity.

PAY FOR A HOME LIKE RENT . . . .

If you are paying from $17 to $25 per month rent, you can easily be owning and paying for your own home on the F. H. A. plan. This payment will include your insurance and taxes, and you make your monthly payment (really like rent) and you will know that sooner or later you will have a house of your own.

Check up on your rent checks and see what you have for yourself. Here is your chance . . . CAN YOU FIGURE OUT WHERE YOU HAVE ANYTHING TO LOSE? Unless you can get your landlord to sell you a place on the same terms, how can you get in bad? Between now and spring why not dig into this "OWN YOUR OWN HOME" movement.

F. H. A. COMPLETES YOUR HOUSE. . . .

F. H. A. does away with all the troubles for the builder. Your house is completed under ONE contract. You decide on what you want, F. H. A. sees that you get it when the house is turned over to you. Again we say: F. H. A. does PROTECT the BUYER of one house in a lifetime.

PEACE

In these trying days of ours, we can look upon the suffering of thousands of people whose countries are at war.

Do you suppose the people of those countries really want to do what they are doing? I'm sure they don't. How many young soldiers are there today who don't envy the American modern youth The American youth do not look upon life just for a good time, but have ambitions they wish to fulfill We of this age are quite concerned about the future and have an earnest prayer in our heart for PEACE. Life is not all gayiety fun, music, and laughter There are rough spots, too. To attain the happiness we all desire, we must preserve peace.

Arkansas Pioneers Used Cabin Door for Sundial

Antique clocks are rarely included in the furnishings owned by old residents in the northern Arkansas hills. The pioneers could waste no covered wagon space on things not absolutely essential for hewing down timber, constructing cabins and tilling the land. Homemade devices for telling time have given rise to a picturesque phraseology. The true mountaineer tells time by the sun. Some of them are accurate to the minute.

A hillman will refer to time as "an hour before sun-up," an hour before sun-down," "straight-up by the sun," "moon-rise time," "an hour by th' sun." In some of the old-time cabins there were "sun-marks" on the floor. When the house was built a mark would be placed where the sun shone through the open door at noon The housewives timed their cooking by the lengthening streak of sunshine. There was a sort of primitive satisfaction in living and working by the sun. Many men who now possess watches prefer to tell time by the sun.

Other old hill people used the puncheon boards—logs split in two and the flat side used as the floor—to tell time In one section of Arkansas the phrase "puncheon time" still is used Most of the puncheons were approximately the same width, and the lengthening of sunshine or shadow on them was counted by puncheons, which usually approximated one hour. Thus "a puncheon until noon" would be 11 o'clock, and "a puncheon after noon, straight up and down," would be one o'clock.

It is said that when the first sawmill was erected at Fayetteville, Ark., the customers demanded that the "timber floorin' " they purchased be the exact width of the old-time puncheons, so that they could still live by "puncheon time "

Value of Wheat Revealed In Early Biblical Times

Wheat has been the most important cereal in international commerce since Biblical times, says the National Geographic society.

"Wheat's supremacy has endured throughout history," the society reported, "since Biblical days when Hiram, king of Tyre, sent timber of cedar and fir for King Solomon's temple at Jerusalem in barter for 20,000 measures of wheat.

"Stock tickers on modern exchanges record the same transaction for which Jacob's 10 sons journeyed from Israel's famine to Egypt's ever-normal granary established by their brother, Prime Minister Joseph.

"Wheat, called King of Cereals, is simply grass gone handsomely to seed. Each flower packs all available earth's foods and sun's energy into its fruitage of golden nuggets. The ripe grains are in fact seeds, cunningly stored with food for the coming winter."

The society, in the first of a series of reports on "Commodities: Common and Uncommon," said development of American wheat resources—and the machinery to harvest vast tracts—gave the world its first inexpensive wheat. Before American mass production dropped the price of wheat, only the rich could afford wheat bread The masses ate black bread of barley or rye.

"As American inventiveness gave large-scale planting a sudden impetus," the report said, "the winning of the western plains gave it a place. Minnesota earned the official nickname of the Wheat state."

Norway Used Dragons

China is not the only country in which dragons are used as a decorative motif The old "stavkirker" or wooden churches, built centuries ago when Christianity was young, are forming one of few links between modern Norway and the Viking past, still show dragon heads on gable ends. For centuries the dragon was one of the favorite emblems of pagan Norway, especially as a figurehead for the prows of her Viking ships. The men who built the ships and decorated them with dragon heads also built the nation's first churches. The church structure allowing them more exercise of imagination, Viking carpenters not only put dragons on the gables but also carved those emblems into the columns, the capitals and even the door frames of the buildings.

Washington's Home

George Washington wrote of Mount Vernon: "No estate in the United States is more pleasantly situated than this. It lies in a high, dry and healthy country, 300 miles by water from the sea, and on one of the finest rivers in the world

I can truly say that I had rather be at Mount Vernon with a friend or two about me than to be attended at the seat of government by the officers of state and the representatives of every power in Europe."

Harnessing the Sun

More than 12,000 residents of Miami, Fla., are harnessing sunlight to get hot water. So powerful is Miami's sun that a glass tank containing coils of copper tubing on the roof of a house will heat water to 205 degrees, and in six hours enough hot water can be run off into a thermos-like reservoir to last the average family three days. The complete equipment sells for about $175.

Speedy?

How fast is a jack rabbit? Milt Peters, of near Montezuma, was driving 45 miles per hour down the highway when a jack rabbit popped up in front of the car Mr Peters increased his speed and at 55 miles an hour was able to catch the prairie flyer and run it down.

Year Late.

On December 22, 1938, a rumor was circulated that Webb Renn, LaPorte City WPA employee, had dropped dead in a stone quarry The rumor was unfounded and as Mr Renn rode to work last month on the "anniversary" of his reported death, he joked with fellow employees about the matter A few hours later, Renn was dead in the same stone quarry, a victim of a heart attack.

Allied Women Handle Major Defense Jobs

'Home Front' Guarded by Women in France And Britain.

By RUTH ADDISON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

PARIS.—Mrs. America, here's something to mull over.

If you lived in this quaint old city today your silken tresses would probably be shorn to a boyish bob. Trousers and slacks would replace your skirts and you'd wear "shelter booties" instead of boudoir slippers—they're lined with rabbit skin and are much warmer in air raid shelters.

You'd select your wardrobe not for style but for convenience. For mademoiselle has got to be able to dress quickly these days.

It's the same way across the English channel in jolly Britain, where the ladies have placed their teacups on the shelf "for the duration," selected chipper uniforms and established themselves as the first line of home defense. The hand that rocks the cradle can also do a lot of other things while the menfolk are fighting at the front.

—And She Actually Pays for This!

Girls of the mechanized transport training corps in England pay half-a-guinea (about $2.50) membership dues and buy their own uniforms. They drive ambulances and work in 24-hour shifts, during which they study first aid, blackout driving and repairing their own vehicles. This girl has just changed a tire.

Never in European history has a war placed so much responsibility on women. Observers of this phenomenon attribute it first to the new feminine independence, and second, to the horrors of mechanized warfare which leave the "home front" just as vulnerable to attack as the front line trenches.

The English women have organized thoroughly under government supervision but the French ladies—possibly because of their highly prized individuality—have shunned government supervision and are doing their own recruiting and training.

Most active of the French groups is that founded by women awarded the Legion of Honor for public service. This body, headed by Mlle. Louise Weiss, has instructed more than half a million Parisiennes in anti-gas protection, plus enrolling and training thousands of women as motorists, motorcyclists, ambulance and truck drivers, evacuation workers, nurses, blood donors, air-raid shelter supervisors, instructors in anti-gas defense, radio operators, interpreters—and even parachute jumpers!

Ladies Search for Gas.

Some unique units have been formed by the French ladies. There's the National Committee on Co-ordination for Passive Defense, which enlists women for work in safeguarding the civilian population. Another is the Corps of Chauffeurs and Chemists for the Detection of Gas. Women motorists and scientists join this unit, which is prepared to work in the midst of a bombardment. Their high-powered cars are equipped with special laboratories. After an air raid they analyze the nature of the gas, using a system of bells and gongs to notify the populace when it's safe to uncover.

You'll find some unusual organizations like the Women's Auxiliary Air Corps, which has pilots and parachute jumpers at the disposition of the French air ministry. Some of them have a parachute food service to provide against shortages caused by blocked land transportation. Women doctors and nurses have been organized, as have doctors, pharmacists—and even midwives.

Social Caste in Red Cross.

Yes, there's a French Red Cross, and it will probably have 80,000 certified and volunteer nurses organized by the end of the war. Unlike the American Red Cross, the French organization has three distinct sections separated by social caste. One is the group for nobility, another for the "grande bourgeoise," and the third for women of less enviable social sphere.

Britain's "Belisha Belles," named after Minister of War Hore-Belisha, are a much more happy-go-lucky group of ladies. Mayfair society matrons and Lambeth charwomen have joined Regent street stylists and Selfridge salesgirls in "carrying on" along the home front and providing auxiliary services behind the Magmot line.

Many are serving in France as nurses, chauffeurs, cooks and orderlies. In England proper others are firefighters, truck drivers, policewomen, canteen organizers and farm hands. So multiple and complex are their duties that a civilian has trouble recognizing the hundred and one uniforms that identify an air raid warden from a bus conductor, or a member of the Women's Land army from one of the Civil Air Guards.

Enlist Nursing Corps.

Thousands of women are assigned to hospitals, first aid posts and army camps as graduate nurses and nursing aides. The Civil Nursing service has enlisted 100,000 "women in white" for training.

A spectacular unit is the ambulance corps with the Port of London emergency river service. These women are equipped to receive wireless distress calls, man patrol boats and assist war casualties through a staff of radio operators, sailors, sea captains and nurses.

Evacuation of children from British cities placed another burden on the women. More than 200,000 of them hustled about making sacks to carry the youngsters' belongings, marshalling them in organized groups and arranging for their new quarters in country homes. Once there, the children had to be supervised, clothed, fed and taught.

British ladies are fast becoming airplane pilots to handle emergency work over the British isles. The government has also accepted them as conductors on busses and trains, while others are serving as asbestos-clad firewomen

Pictured as she overhauled the innards of her tractor is a 63-year-old British grandmother, member of Britain's Women's Land army. Having completed four weeks of training in an agricultural camp, she is a qualified tractor operator.

BIG MUDDY

Engineers, Playing With Model, Forecast Mississippi's Actions

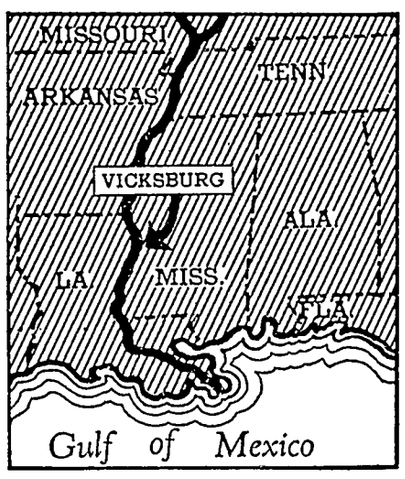
By WADE W. SCOTT

VICKSBURG, MISS. — They have the mighty Mississippi river under control in a model that sprawls between two hills at the United States waterways experiment station just outside the city limits of Vicksburg and only a stone's throw from the mighty river itself.

Engineers, assistants and laborers, 200 strong, conduct their own ravaging floods, record the antics of the Mississippi and its tributaries as casually as any other group of men at work on an easier job. Comparisons are frequently made and surveyors' field books closely studied all during the operations. There is no guesswork about what the river is doing at one point when it is flowing over the levee at another.

Inches Represent Miles.

Water may be turned in at one point and after a few minutes the experimenters can tell what would happen at a point hundreds of miles further down the stream by merely glancing at a gauge or by walking a few steps they can actually see what is going on. There is no mistake about the water backing up into certain tributaries nor how much of the water is taken from the Mississippi through the Atchafalaya river to the Gulf of Mexico. It takes only a few minutes to see the happenings of a 24-hour day, inches represent miles as the harmless little rivulet tells in a few seconds what the Mississippi would take hours to do.



Map shows Vicksburg, site of the waterways experiment station, and the lower Mississippi river area whose fluctuations it anticipates.

In another section, as the floods are holding the interest of one group another crew may be using powdered coal in a separate part of the model to determine how much silt and mud would be deposited at a certain point if the river reached a certain height. The shifting of the sands can be noted as the water whips from one side of the modeled river to the other.

Gauge Flood Effects.

By chipping off a concrete levee about two inches high, the water is turned loose to seek its level and the time it takes to cover a certain area is known as well as what tributary the water would eventually reach, which town would be endangered.

There may be some controversy about the effect of trees retarding the current, but the argument has been settled by screen wire bent and stood on edge at the comparative distance with trees on the real river's banks or the hundreds of islands along the stream. When changes are made in the river by cutoffs similar changes are made on the model.

The model is built on a distorted scale in some respects but by using the slide rule the engineers are never stumped. They take their readings as simply as a carpenter would read his rule. In fact, higher mathematics is far simpler for the operators of the model than the river itself and a little thing like a distorted scale and a few movements of their ivory rule gives them the answer quickly.

Size Doesn't Matter Just So It's a Fish

LONDON.—A fish is a fish these days, the British ministry of agriculture has decided.

There used to be a law establishing minimum sizes of fish which could be landed, but the ministry recently announced that Englishmen no longer have to throw back the little ones. From now on, owing to the war, the country's food supply comes first.

War operations in the North sea have been interfering with the operations of herring trawlers, and to make up this deficiency it was decided that from now on all is fish that comes into the net.

THE PROBLEM OF FORGIVENESS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:21-35.
GOLDEN TEXT—And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.—Matthew 6.12.

Christianity and forgiveness belong together. Among the religions of the earth Christianity stands out as the one true faith because it properly and adequately meets the problem of sin. In Christ is provided forgiveness for sin, cleansing from all unrighteousness, a new birth by which one enters into a life of holiness and power.

Since these things are true it would seem to be almost unnecessary to urge God's children to be of a forgiving spirit. But as Bishop Ryle says, "It is a melancholy fact that there are few Christian duties so little practiced as that of forgiveness. It is sad to see how much bitterness, unmercifulness, spite, harshness and unkindness there is among men." Surely these things ought not so to be.

I. The Extent of Forgiveness (vv. 21, 22).

"How long do I have to stand it?" is the question of the human heart untouched by the spirit of Christ. The injustices of life, the offenses of our fellow men against us, all seem to pile up until the burden is about to crush us. What is the answer to man's cry?

The Jews had an answer. Three times is enough. Forgive once, yes. Again, yes. But the third time, no. Peter was big-hearted enough to more than double that allowance of mercy. He was willing to forgive not just two or three times, but seven times. The point to be kept in mind, however, is that whether forgiveness means three times or seven times, if there is a limit, it is a matter of reckoning, of keeping books, and of ultimately bringing down our judgment upon the heads of the offenders.

The spirit of Christ swept all of that aside. He said that one should forgive 70 times seven. In other words, Christian forgiveness is to be untiring, unlimited, to know no weariness and have no boundaries. If one really forgives it is because he has a forgiving spirit and that spirit is not exhausted by use, but rather grows by exercise.

A word of caution is in order at this point. Let no one suppose that our Lord's instruction means that offenses against the law of the land or against the good order of society are to be overlooked and condoned. It relates to the cultivation of a personal spirit of forgiveness, the laying aside of revenge, of malice, of retaliation which do not become the Christian.

II. The Motive of Forgiveness (vv. 23-34).

Two motives are given in our text, the first being that since we ourselves are daily and hourly in need of forgiveness at the merciful hand of God, we should in turn be merciful toward those who sin against us. Compared with our offenses against the law of God, we know that the misdeeds of our neighbors against us are mere trifles. Remember what God has done for you, and then when you are tempted to be hard and ungracious with your brother, remember the mercy of God.

The second motive is the remembrance that a day of judgment is to come. There is always a time of reckoning ahead even as was the case with these servants. Remember not only what God has done for you and is doing for you, but what you must yet expect Him to do in that day of judgment.

III. The Importance of Forgiveness (v. 35).

A man dealing with his fellow man is apt to think that it is merely a matter between man and man. We are not dealing with a straight line between ourselves and our brother (that was Peter's error), but with a triangle at whose apex is God Himself. If I expect God to forgive me, I must let that same forgiveness flow out to my brother. If I deal with him as though God had nothing to do with the matter, then I must not try to count God's forgiveness into the picture when I stand indebted before Him.

Here again we express a word of caution. Let no one suppose that our redemption in Christ is contingent upon what we do toward our brethren. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast" (Eph. 2:8, 9). Nor does the truth of our lesson mean that we are somehow going to bargain with God, trading a bit of our forgiveness toward others for His forgiveness of us. God is not interested in such transactions. But it does mean that if you cannot or will not forgive, you may well consider whether you are a Christian at all.

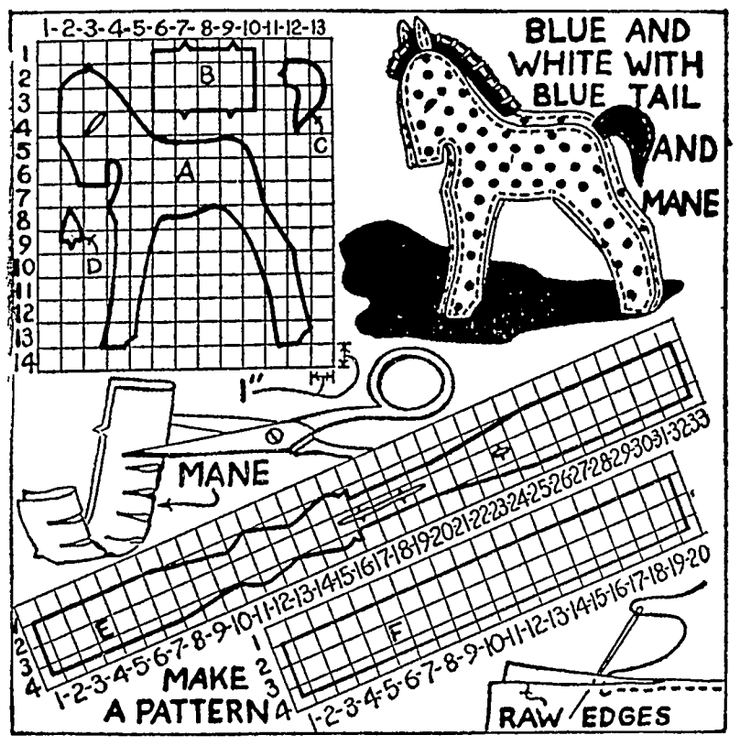
Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? There is more hope of a fool than of him.—Proverbs 29, 20.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



A washable pony.

THIS pony may be made of oil cloth or other waterproof fabric. It is stuffed with cotton or bits of soft cloth, and is a fascinating toy for a gift or to sell at bazaars.

Rule paper into 1-inch squares; number them; then draw pattern outlines, as shown. The pattern for the body is shown at A; the mane at B; tail C; ears D. The strip E joins the two sides of the body. The openings are for mane and tail. The projections show where ears are sewed. Cut two pieces for each ear, and the tail; sew together, padding slightly. Strip F is for bottoms of feet; and under part of body and legs.

The raw edges are sewn together on the right side as at the lower right, with heavy thread to match tail and mane.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' 32-page Sewing Book No. 4, contains directions for making dolls; gift items for all ages; and novelties that have sold unusually well at bazaars. She will mail copy upon receipt of name, address and 10 cents in coin.

AROUND THE HOUSE

An excellent cleaning "weapon" for kitchen utensils is found in a good-sized bottle cork. Moisten the bottom end, dip it in a powdered cleaner and rub the utensils.

To clean rubber sponges, put half an ounce of bicarbonate of soda in half a pint of water and soak them all night in this solution.

When using soap dyes that come in cake form, put cake into soap shaker and shake until dye is right color. It will not then be necessary to strain dye.

Prunes for Puddings.—Prunes lend themselves to almost any form of bread pudding. For this purpose it is well to soak them until the stones can be taken out easily, and then chop them.

And The New Year

The first of the year is a good time to study the years to come.

Most facts of the future are unknown to any of us. A few are certain, and it is helpful to build on these .One of the certainties is that spending all your income as you go along will NOT build a reserve for later years. Another is that moderate-sized, Regular deposits, earning compound interest in the bank, mount up to surprising totals over a period of years.

As you think over these two certainties, you may find that they have an important bearing on your future plans.

Annual Hancock County Basket Ball Tournamet January 24 To 27

SHAMROCKS DRAW BYE TO PLAY THEIR FIRST GAME ON THURSDAY EVE

Garner Meets Britt and Goodell Plays Crystal Lake In Opener

The event of the season looked forward to by basket ball fans is the annual Hancock County tournament, to be held in the Garner High School gym on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, January 24 to January 27. The first game gets under way on Wednesday night at 7:30 between Goodell and Crystal Lake. Garner and Britt go into battle for the second game at 8:30 o'clock.

The Klemme Shamrocks will play the winner of the Goodell-Crystal Lake fracus at 8:00 o'clock Thursday evening, Jan. 25.

The pairings seem to be the best matched this year of any previous tournament staged. Garner and Britt are about on a par in the North Iowa Conference; Goodell and Crystal Lake are both highly rated in the Seven Eagles Conference; Corwith leads in the Sioux Valley Conference. The Klemme Shamrocks are showing fine form and are a threat, while Hayfield and Woden have won a share of the Eagles Conference games. The tournament this year should provide plenty of thrills and no team will have a walk-away this year in any of the games.

TOURNAMENT SCHEDULE

Schedule for the tournament as announced by Mr. Tweed is as follows:

Wednesday, Jan. 24, at 7:30 p. m. game 1, Goodell vs. Crystal Lake; at 8:30 p. m game 2, Garner vs. Britt.

Thursday, Jan. 25, at 7 p. m. game three, Woden vs. Kanawha; at 8:00 p. m. game four, Klemme vs. the winner of game one; and at 9:00 p. m. game five, Corwith vs. Hayfield.

Friday, Jan 26, at 7:30 p. m semi-final round game six, winner of game five vs. winner of game four; and at 8:30 p. m. semi-final round game seven, winner of game two vs. winner of game three.

Saturday, Jan. 27, at 7:30 p. m consolation final matching the two losing teams from Friday night; and at 8:30 p. m. championship final matching the two winning teams from Friday night for the Hancock county trophy.

"Ninotchka" Has Garbo Playing Comedy At Last

Garbo sings, Garbo dances, and Garbo laughs in her first picture in two years and her first venture into sophisticated modern romantic comedy. The picture is "Ninotchka" in which the Swedish star comes Sun., Mon., and Tues., January 21, 22, and 23 to the Avery Theatre. Teamed with Melvin Douglas who also played opposite her in "As You Desire Me", Garbo was directed by Ernest Lubitsch Many whimsical "Lubitsch touches" enliven the story. Garbo plays a stern Soviet Commissioner sent to Paris by the Russian government to sell a noblewoman's confiscated jewels. The noblewoman and a French Count fight the deal in court Garbo and the count fall in love. The noblewoman maneuvers to get Garbo back to Russia, but the Count maneuvers to have her sent to Constantinople where they are married.

Shamrocks Win Close Conference Game From Woden Friday

SHAMROCKS WIN OVER WODEN SECOND TIME THIS SEASON

Little Shamrocks Won Their Tilt 41 To 14

Coach Bodge Bowles and his Shamrock basketeers took on a difficult task last Thursday night and did it well. They met Woden on their own floor and took them into camp in a good ball game by a score of 34 to 32. The Klemme second team completely outclassed Woden's reserves to win by a count of 41 to 14.

In the first team game, Bill Grosshuesch went on a scoring rampage in the first half to ring up thirteen points for the high score of the evening. In the second half, he turned over his scoring duties to Dode Grange, who counted a total of ten points in the last two frames. Allen Barz, who left the game on fouls in the third quarter, also contributed a good share of baskets for the winners. He got three field goals and a free throw before he left the contest, and played an outstanding floor game. Buseman, Zabilka, Brinkman and Schoenwetter all helped the Shamrock cause with some nice playing in their respective departments

For Woden, Gibson and Rudisill were high scorers with ten points each. Gibson also left the game on fouls.

Little Shamrocks Win

The Little Shamrocks held their opponents to a lone field goal in the first half of their game, while Jacobs, Brinkman and Zabilka were scoring heavily to bring the first half count to 19 to 2. Coach Bowles inserted all of his reserves, but the Woden seconds were never in the game. Elwyn Jacobs led the Klemme scoring with fourteen points, and Garland Brinkman took runner-up honors with nine.

FURNITURE DISPLAY ROOM IMPROVED AT WELLEMEYER'S STORE

Art Wellemeyer has made a number of changes and improvements in his furniture display room on the second floor of his building. Among some of the improvements included the installation of venetian blinds on the large windows on the front of the second story He has built a number of racks of different types for better displaying of mattresses, chairs, etc. And has re-arranged the floor stock which now shows up to better advantage.

New venetian blinds admit sunlight during the daytime, and many electric lights wih blue bulbs brighten up the sales floor with "daylight" for the showing of merchandise at night.

The Wellemeyer Store force is especially busy this week setting up a carload of furniture which just arrived, and displaying a large shipment of room-sized wool rugs for a special sale, mentioned elsewhere in this issue of the Times. Mr. Wellemeyer expects business to be good this spring, and wants to have on hand everything the Public wants, and when they want it.

Basket Ball On Menu Here Friday Night

FIRST GOOD SNOW THIS WINTER FELL IN NORTH IOWA SATURDAY

The first heavy snow for this winter fell over North Iowa Saturday, starting early in the morning and continuing throughout the day. Between four and six inches fell in this section.

With a heavy wind, roads were drifting in places Sunday but most roads were passable.

Prior to the snow which fell Saturday, this part of the state had only a few light flurries and a total of about two inches of snow.

Sound of Voice

The sound of the human voice is as dependent for its pleasant qualities upon the air as it is upon the organs which produce the sound. Experiments were made by Dr Ernst Barany, of the University of Upsala, Sweden, in which the air with which the lungs are normally filled was replaced by hydrogen The subject under experiment exhaled air and breathed in hydrogen from a rubber bag. Using the hydrogen as a medium for carrying the sound waves he spoke many test syllables which were studied in many ways and compared with the sounds produced when air was breathed. The lighter gas in the body cavities caused some of the sound frequencies in the voice to be raised one to two octaves Test listeners were able to understand only about two-thirds of the syllables spoken.

Widows Remarry

Although climatic and latitudinal variations probably complicate the question, a court case in Sydney, Australia, in which a widow claimed $10,000 damages for the loss of her husband who had been killed while working on the railway, has revealed from the investigations of counsel, the surprisingly high percentages of remarriages. An actuary said the proportion of widows of 33 who would remarry within 23 years was 56 per cent.

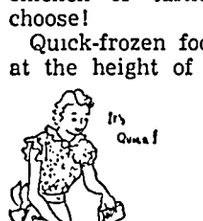
Household News By Eleanor Howe

QUICK-FROZEN FOODS A WISE CHOICE
(See Recipes Below)

'Sing a Song of Seasons'

In the not too-distant past, we sang a song of seasons in food—oysters in the "R" months; fresh vegetables in spring and summer; juicy berries in June, July, and August; and tender turkeys in the fall. But the newest method of preserving foods — quick-freezing — means "open season" on most foods at any time of year—fresh berries in January, oysters in June, and choice chicken or turkey whenever you choose!

Quick-frozen foods are harvested at the height of the season, when flavor and quality are at their best; freezing is done so close to the place where the food is harvested, caught, or killed, and the cleaning, cutting or slicing are done so rapidly, that there is no chance for the food to lose its flavor and freshness.



Quick-frozen foods are a good tip for the homemaker who values her leisure and her manicures! All the grubby preparation tasks are done before the freezing, so kitchen duty is practically cut in half! That means that frosted or quick-frozen foods are a wise choice when you're entertaining. By the way, you can use them for most of the recipes in my booklet, "Easy Entertaining." With quick-frozen foods to cut down the work and "Easy Entertaining" to give you menus and recipes that are practical and different, company meals are a simple matter!

Cream Gravy.

Drain all but about ¼ cup of fat from the frying pan. Add ¼ cup flour and blend well. Gradually stir in 1½ cups of rich milk (or half milk and half cream). Cook over low flame, stirring constantly, until the gravy thickens. Season with salt and pepper, if desired.

Asparagus With Lemon Butter Sauce.

1 package quick-frozen asparagus
¼ cup butter
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Cook quick-frozen asparagus in boiling water, as directed on the package. Drain. Cream butter and add lemon juice gradually. Pour over the hot asparagus and serve at once.

Red Raspberry Shortcake.
(Serves 4)

1 box (10 ounces) quick-frozen red raspberries (thawed)
⅓ cup sugar
4 tablespoons water
4 hot shortcake biscuits, split and buttered
⅓ cup cream (whipped)

Mix raspberries with ⅓ cup sugar and 4 tablespoons water and crush slightly. Let stand ½ hour, stirring occasionally. Spread raspberries on lower halves of hot shortcake biscuits; top with upper halves and additional berries. Garnish with whipped cream.

French Fried Shrimp.
(Serves 4-5)

1 package quick-frozen cooked and cleaned shrimp
Seasoned crumbs
1 egg
1 tablespoon water

Thaw the shrimp as directed. Dip in the seasoned crumbs, then in the egg beaten with the water and back in the crumbs. Fry in deep fat (380 degrees) for 2 to 3 minutes, or until the shrimp are well browned. Serve hot with tartar sauce.

Deep Dish Blueberry Pies.
(Serves 4-5)

1 package quick-frozen blueberries
¾ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter
Plain pastry

Combine berries (it is not necessary to thaw them first), sugar, salt, and butter. Place in individual baking dishes (with no under crust). Cut rounds of pastry, slightly larger than the tops of the baking dishes. Place a round of pastry on each baking dish, and pinch the pastry to the edge of the dish. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees) for 10 minutes; then reduce the heat (350 degrees) and bake about 25 minutes longer.

Shortcake Biscuits.
(Makes 4 large biscuits).

1 cup flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons sugar
2½ tablespoons butter
⅜ cup milk

Sift dry ingredients together. Cut in the butter and add milk gradually. Turn onto floured board and knead gently for about 5 seconds. Pat out, and cut into 4 large rounds. Brush with melted butter. TIPS FOR HOUSEWIFE

Lamp shades of painted tin combine well with pottery bases.

Before adding sugar to cake mixture always sift through a fine strainer.

For iced coffee you should be a little more generous with your coffee measure.

Mend leaks in gas or water pipes by winding long strips of cloth dipped in hot paraffin.

Left-over sandwiches need not be discarded. Brush with melted butter and saute to a golden brown on each side.

One tablespoon of cooked oatmeal thoroughly beaten into the mixture for pumpkin pie saves one egg and cannot be detected.

Chill plates, dishes and glasses in which cold foods and drinks are to be served. The food and drink will stay cold much longer.

To remove ink from fingers, dip fingers and an unburned sulphur match in water. Rub the match over the ink spot until it vanishes.

When buying canned goods for emergency shelf, immediately write on the label the month, date, year and price. This enables one to use the older things first and so keep your stock fresh.

Martin Dies Grows in U. S. Esteem As 'Ism' Investigation Bears Fruit

By HOWARD LANCASTER
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON.—"The only thing that counts in these investigations is what gets into the papers."

That was Martin Dies' credo the moment he opened the first hearing before his congressional committee investigating un-American activities and propaganda.

Within a few weeks most of the nation was laughing at him. Strip-Teaser Gypsy Rose Lee offered to bare all for the committee, and little Shirley Temple was labeled a Communist decoy by one of Mr. Dies' witnesses.

It seems strange, therefore, that much of America is laughing on the other side of its face today. There are still plenty of people who think the committee's early investigations were a farce (and Dies admits he got a few crackpot witnesses), but a peculiar combination of circumstances has placed the un-Americanism committee front and center on the Washington stage.

This month, having submitted a report on its second year's investigation, the committee is asking congress for a new appropriation. Here's why it happened:

First, you have the correct combination of men and times. Dies is the 38-year-old Texan with heavy hands and yellow hair whose sole claim to fame after seven lean years in congress was his penchant for speech-making and a hatred for "isms."

Two other men instrumental in this affair were New York's Nazi-hating Rep. Samuel Dickstein and Vice President Jack Garner. Dickstein used to have a habit of baiting Hitler from the house floor and reading long lists of citizens whom he accused of being Nazis. His fellow Jews thought he was doing the race more harm than good, and the house didn't like to be embarrassed. So the rules committee (of which Dies was a member) decided to silence Dickstein by stealing his thunder.

Jack Garner's place in this affair is mysterious, but possibly very important. Being a fellow Texan and a friend of Dies, he might have seen an opportunity for poking the red-hot spotlight of publicity into left-wing elements of the New Deal, thus paving the way for his own candidacy in 1940.

By 1938 the shirt crowd—black shirts, brown shirts, silver shirts, etc.—were getting to be a dirty shirt crowd. When Martin Dies read about Bundsfuehrer Fritz Kuhn, his shirts and his camps, his blue eyes saw red.

ORATOR—Until he started red-baiting, Martin Dies' only claim to fame was presidency of the "Demagogues" club, whose tin badge is awarded only to those congressmen who get particularly windy.

Another reason was the LaFollette civil liberties committee, which had been accusing industrialists of employing spies to prevent their employees from organizing. To provide an offsetting influence, many congressmen thought somebody should investigate subversive influences.

Finally, there was the Dies mania for publicity. It's rumored that he called off an important hearing last autumn because the world series was monopolizing the headlines. And he's not ashamed to admit it: "The good that this committee does depends on how many people read the testimony in newspapers. Who in the world is going to bother about the official record?"

Paying $5 a day and traveling expenses for each witness eats up a $25,000 appropriation like a cat laps up milk. Which is one reason the committee's first year was a perfect model of what congressional investigations shouldn't be. Dies had no counsel, no co-operation from the administration and no reason to expect any.

But he did get publicity, and last year an alarmed citizenry demanded that these un-American upstarts be ferreted out and shot at sunrise. Result: A $100,000 appropriation.

Dies couldn't fight a world series but he used a much bigger competitive news story as a stepladder to fame. That story was World War II. The Communist-Nazi pact last August gave him new stature, for it proved the swastikas were blood brothers to the hammers-and-sickles.

Since the war started America has tried to lock its gates against foreign propagandists, and has begun wondering if Martin Dies isn't something of a prophet. Suddenly the nation has realized that—despite his blustering and apparently misdirected efforts—this red-baiter has actually hung quite a few scalps outside his wigwam.

In 1938 he pointed the committee's guns westward from Washington and helped mow down 45 Democratic congressmen. Dies charged that Frank Murphy failed to carry out his gubernatorial duties in the Flint sit-down strike back in 1937, and the resultant rumpus contributed to Murphy's defeat when he sought re-election.

Even the administration has started to co-operate. President Roosevelt called it "sordid procedure" when the committee published names of 565 government employees on the mailing list of the American League for Peace and Democracy, the inference being that these people were Communists. But a few days later Dies' charges against Communist Earl Browder took shape in a federal indictment. Bundsfuehrer Fritz Kuhn, limelighted by the committee, was sent to Sing Sing by New York District Attorney Tom Dewey.

The case of Harry Bridges, radical west coast labor leader, was shouted from the housetops until Madame Secretary Perkins agreed to a hearing on charges that Bridges was an undesirable alien. A decision is now pending.

Glaring at labor, Martin Dies accused the unions of harboring foreign agents. He now claims one of the largest unions is quietly purging its ranks. He was partially responsible for the recent house investigation of the National Labor Relations board, in which unsavory reports were aired.

Dies put a stop to the WPA federal theater project, which he said was alive with Communists. He also talked congress into halving the appropriation of Senator LaFollette's civil liberties committee, which is working the other side of the "ism" street.

Even his most severe critics now admit Martin Dies is coming of age, though they still notice a lot of rough edges that need polishing. Oblivious to criticism, Dies has made his report to congress and started campaigning for more funds.

Here's his view of it: He's proved conclusively the existence of "isms" in the United States. Therefore the next logical step is to get at the cause of these radical movements. To this end he would ask congress for funds to interview share-croppers, laborers, sailors, dispossessed farmers, bootblacks and all other unhappy Americans who come within ear shot.

It would be the biggest show on earth, with Martin Dies as ringmaster.

The Fury of Martin Dies Fell On:

FRITZ KUHN
New York became interested in his German-American bund after the Dies committee had polished him off. Result: He's now serving time at Sing Sing.

JAMES A. FARLEY
His national Democratic organization suffered in 1938 when 70 congressional seats were lost, most of thanks to Martin Dies' activity in critical states.

EARL BROWDER
He admitted traveling abroad on a fake passport in testimony before the Dies committee. Now America's No. 1 Communist is under federal indictment.

BOB LA FOLLETTE
His civil liberties committee is accused by Dies of coddling undesirables. As a result, LaFollette's committee received a smaller fund last year.

HARRY BRIDGES
Dies hammered against this alien west coast labor leader until Madame Secretary Perkins was forced to hold an extradition hearing. Decision is pending.

FRANK MURPHY
He lost his Michigan gubernatorial re-election campaign, mostly because the Dies committee charged he shirked his duty in connection with a sitdown strike.

Recall Story of 'Windwagon' Thomas Who Built the Queerest Vehicle That Ever Traveled the Santa Fe Trail

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

THINK of the Santa Fe Trail and you think of wagons—"wagons reaking up long prairie lopes; wagons rolling down ills; wagons grinding hrough heavy sand, sucking hrough sticky mud, swishing hrough tall grass; wagons ith locked wheels plunging own steep river-banks; wagns snaked through clinging uicksands, or jiggling over bbed sandbars rough as obblestones; wagons hauled ard by painful yard up the rbidding rocks of the Raton ass, two slow miles a day; agons corraled against the tack of treacherous redins; wagons broken down, andoned, stranded by the ss of animals stolen by raidg savages; wagons burned prairie fires; wagons arped and shrunken by the eat and drouth. Wagons ammed with rich furs, exican silver, gold bullion."

Thus writes Stanley Vestal in s book, "The Old Santa Fe rail," published recently by the oughton Mifflin company of Bosn, and the first chapter in that olume of interesting yarns is deoted to the story of what was robably the queerest vehicles at ever traveled over that trail. he scene of this true story is id in Westport, Mo., the eastern rminus of the trail, and is deribed by Mr. Vestal thus:

"One spring day in 1853, the tizens of that frontier town were mazed to see a light vehicle eering down the street, driven the wind which filled its white ail. Horses reared and ran way, women and children fled to their houses, dogs scuttled r safety, and the men of Westort stood with open mouths, atching that strange craft come ailing in.

"Its pilot lowered the sail, cked his brakes, and rolled to stop before the entrance to the oakum Tavern. He disemarked, and the startled citizens athered to inspect his bark and uestion him.

Navigator of the Prairie.

"They learned that his name as Thomas, that he had come om somewhere east, and that is sole cargo consisted of a comass, a water butt and a carpetag. He walked like a seafaring an, and they suspected that he as tattooed under his faded onkey jacket. Was he a whaler, ad he ever struck a fish? They ould not tell, for Thomas wasted w words in telling of himself. e announced that he had come s the Navigator of the Prairies, nd invited them to join with him nd form a company to engage the Santa Fe trade!

"In Yoakum's Tavern, leading tizens split a bottle with him, hile he diverted them by explaining his plan. He proposed to uild—with their backing—a fleet large prairie clippers to carry argo to the cussed Spaniards. he advantages of wind-power ere numerous, according to the autical stranger. Speed, econoy, freedom from the expense of uying and the trouble of feeding raft animals, freedom to leave e Trail along the Arkansas Riv- (since there would be no anials requiring water) and sail on e high prairies by compass. estport was the outfitting place r all travelers bound west; it ould be easy to have the wagons uilt there. Injuns would be ared of the strange craft. And here would never be any lack of ind to drive them."

All of which sounded perfectly gical. But, according to Mr. estal, there were skeptics in the rowd who suspected that there as a catch somewhere in the heme proposed by this clever ankee. They scoffed at his idea building what they derisively ferred to as a "dryland navy." y gum, they weren't going to ut any money of theirs in such crazy proposition!

Proved It Would Sail.

But Thomas wasn't discouraged by their skepticism. Just prove that his plan was practicable he announced that he ould sail his queer craft to ouncil Grove—150 miles away—nd then come back and make em eat their words about his windwagon." As he left town a cloud of dust and lumbered oss the prairie, they were ure that they would never m again. But they were for in about a week he d, bringing with him a letm a man who ran a blackshop at Council Grove as proof that he had actually been there.

A 'CLIPPER OF THE PRAIRIE'

Almost as strange as the "windwagon" described in this article was the vehicle conceived by the imaginative writer of one of the popular nickel novels of 50 years ago. Shown above is the illustration on the cover of No. 87 of Vol. IV of the Frank Reade Library which bore the title "Frank Reade Jr.'s Clipper of the Prairie; or, Fighting Apaches in the Far Southwest." This "prairie clipper" seems to have been a cross between a modern war tank and a trailer. The living quarters had an observation platform on the roof and a good-sized cannon mounted forward. It was propelled by steam on caterpillar-tread wheels and had a ram-like projection from the front with which that intrepid hero, Frank Reade Jr. ran down buffalo and impaled them!

The former skeptics were now convinced that he knew what he was talking about and they agreed to finance the construction of a super-windwagon. They organized the "Overland Navigation Company" and the stockholders included some of the most prominent citizens of Westport—Dr. J. W. Parker, the leading physician; Attorney J. J. Mastin; Benjamin Newson, the Indian agent; Henry Sager; Thomas W. Adams; and, of course, the inventor, "Windwagon" Thomas.

A Huge Wagon-Ship.

Under his direction there was built a huge prairie schooner, 25 feet long and with a seven-foot beam, mounted on four big wheels, each 12 feet in diameter. The sides of the wagon, which formed the "cabin" of this ship of the plains, rose to the top of the wheels and above it was the "deck." Toward the front was a tall mast which carried only a mainsail, but instead of the front being the prow, as it is on a seagoing vessel, the tail-gate of the wagon was the prow and the tongue of the wagon was brought up and over the stern to serve as a tiller.

Came the day when "Windwagon" was ready to demonstrate his land leviathan. It required two yoke of oxen to haul it out on the open prairie. Then the directors of the company—who, according to Mr. Vestal, had "fortified themselves at Yoakum's bar"—went aboard. That is, all of them did except Dr. Parker. Evidently he decided that his professional services might be needed before the "voyage" was over and he wanted to be able to supply them. So he mounted his favorite mount, a mule, and prepared to follow the bold navigator, Cap'n Thomas, who mounted the deck, hoisted his sail and reached for the tiller.

A strong wind was blowing and as it began to belly the huge sail, the wagon-ship got under way. Gradually it picked up speed and Dr. Parker had to "put the gad" to his mule to keep up with it. Cap'n Thomas' passengers were delighted when the windwagon started, thus justifying their faith in its navigability and reassuring them that they hadn't invested in something that would prove to be a failure. But as its momentum increased they began to be a little alarmed and as it went careening over hill and dale they became frightened. It was going so fast that they didn't dare jump out, as they wished to do. So they began to yell to the skipper to slow his craft down.

"Windwagon," however, was figuratively, if not literally, "on the crest of the wave," due partly to the stimulation of the cargo he had taken on at Yoakum's bar and partly to the heady wine of success. Instead of heeding their frightened cries and shortening sail, he began to demonstrate his seamanship.

"Watch me run 'er against the wind!" he shouted as he put over the helm. That was a mistake, as he soon learned. For as the heavy ship-wagon came around, something went wrong. Evidently the wind caught her sail the wrong way for suddenly she went into reverse. The quick-footed mule on which Dr. Parker was riding jumped aside just in time, otherwise both it and its rider would have been run down.

Then the steering-gear seemed to have locked and before Cap'n Thomas knew what was happening his ship was going around and around in ever-widening circles. By now his passengers were terror-stricken. High as they were from the ground and risky as a jump was, they decided that it was high time to heed the urge to "abandon ship." While their befuddled skipper roared out orders in nautical terms which neither they—nor probably he—could understand, they leaped overboard. By some miracle of good fortune no one was killed and the worst anyone could charge up against the experience was a few bruises and a thoroughly agitated mind.

As for Cap'n Thomas, true to the traditions of the sea, he stuck by his ship, evidently determined to go down with flying colors and perish with it if need be. But there was no such dramatic end to his career as a dryland sailor. For within a few minutes his craft ended up with a bump against a stake-and-rider fence on the bank of Turkey creek and stopped suddenly, albeit so suddenly that he was jolted off and landed in a heap on the ground.

With this inglorious end to his first voyage, his dream of a fleet of prairie ships vanished. "Nothing Windwagon could say would induce the Company to build the rest of the fleet," writes Mr. Vestal. "The lubbers had no heart for prairie seafaring. They went back to their shops and their offices, put the venture down to profit and loss, and thanked heaven that they were still alive and sound. What else could be expected of men who halted on the edge of the sea of grass?

'Windwagon' Vanishes.

"But Windwagon remained undaunted. He embarked once more in the small, light craft in which he had come to Westport, made sail, and vanished as swiftly and mysteriously as he had come. History has no more to tell of him.

"Maybe he sailed away to shoot buffalo from the after-deck, or harpoon redskins daring enough to run afoul of him on their cruising ponies. Perhaps he ran hard aground in some deep valley or ravine, where no wind came to fill his sail, and no bull-whacker blundered in to haul him out upon the sandy plain. Perhaps the cussed Injuns found him thus becalmed, and hung his hair upon some pony's bridle.

"There are legends among the Indians of a vehicle seen on the prairie, a wagon that was bigger than any wagon, which moved without horses or oxen to draw it and carried a white 'flag' as tall as a tipi.* What became of the Navigator of the Plains will never be known.

"But, in two respects, his story is significant, showing us how men of those days thought of the Plains, with all the beauty and mystery of the sea, and also illustrating the dauntless character of the men who crossed them, made them their home."

According to Mr. Vestal's notes in the appendix to his volume, an account of this incident appeared in the Kansas City Star for August 6, 1905, and recent files of the Southwest Review gives a version of the Indian legend referred to.

While it may seem strange that "Windwagon" Thomas would think of applying some of the technique of ocean navigation to travel across the broad plains of the West, it is not really so unusual. For, as Mr. Vestal explains in this same chapter, "In the old days, travelers on those plains spoke habitually of 'making port,' urged Congress to enact navigation laws for the 'prairie ocean.' Their covered wagons, appropriately dubbed 'prairie schooners,' were in fact watertight boats mounted on wheels, rising high at prow and stern. They thought of the plains in terms of seafaring, and felt the glamour of them as a magic of the sea. They named the jumping-off place in Missouri, Westport!"

The "prairie schooners" of Santa Fe trail and Oregon trail fame were modifications of the original "covered wagon," an eastern vehicle which was developed in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. This was the Conestoga wagon, which antedated the western "prairie schooner" by at least a century.

Although the first of these vehicles were modified English covered farm wagons, which came into use in New England and other places on the Atlantic seaboard early in the colonial days, local conditions in Pennsylvania—notably the greater distances between the producer and his market, which made it essential that the Pennsylvania farm wagon hold twice as much as the New England farm wagon, where distances were shorter, hence the sturdier built and heavier wagon requiring from four to eight horses to pull it—quickly resulted in the development of a distinctive type of wagon for this region.

Gradually the excellence of the wagons made by the wheelwrights of the Conestoga valley of Lancaster county caused them to become famous throughout the country and "Conestoga wagon" became a sort of trademark for this type of freight carrier. They differed from the English wagons from which they sprang in that the bed was longer and deeper and had considerable sag in the middle, both lengthwise and crosswise. There was a very good reason for this. If, while the wagon was pursuing its way over some rough trail or down a steep mountainside, the load would shift, settle toward the center and not throw its bulk against the endgates. Unlike the bows, which held the white cover of the English wagon, which were vertical, the bows of the Conestoga followed the line of the ends of the body and slanted outward, thus keeping out rain and dust. The whole appearance of the Conestoga was that of a boat and, as John Omwake, author of "The Conestoga Six-Horse Bell Teams of Eastern Pennsylvania, 1750-1850," says, "It is easy to see why this wagon should have been called the Ship of Inland Commerce, as it cruised with its great white top between the green Pennsylvania hills."

The Conestoga wagon came into existence just in time to have a part in making American history. As early as 1745 Benjamin Franklin was issuing a broadside urging wagoners to enlist with their wagons and teams in the king's service against the French and Indians. Ten years later when General Braddock set out upon his ill-fated expedition it was very necessary that he have adequate transport for his provisions during his march into the wilderness. Securing this was only one of the many difficulties of that harassed leader and it was not until Benjamin Franklin came to his aid and persuaded the Pennsylvania wagoners to enlist that the expedition was able to make any progress westward.

The Conestoga wagons played their part, too, in the struggle for liberty. It was these vehicles which carried supplies to the American army during that terrible winter at Valley Forge and in the spring of 1778 a sturdy Conestoga wagon, drawn by four horses and with a full company of Continental soldiers as a guard, brought $600,000 in silver, the loan of the French government from Portsmouth, N. H., to the government treasury at York, Pa., (where the Continental congress was then meeting). But it was in the period after the Revolution that the Conestoga rose to its full glory—as the carrier of freight back and forth to the West and as the vehicle of the emigrants into the Kentucky and Ohio country. It also served once more as a weapon of war during the War of 1912 when Conestoga wagons carried powder from the Brandywine mills to Lake Erie, there to be used in Perry's brilliant victory at Put-in-Bay.

YIELD IS TEST FOR DAIRY COW

High Production Outweighs Increased Feed Cost.

By DR. GEORGE E. TAYLOR

Even though they may consume more feed each year, high producing cows enrolled in dairy herd improvement associations yield greater returns over feed costs than low producers, according to records at the New Jersey college of agriculture.

The average D. H. I. A. cow in the U. S. produces 7,831 pounds of milk and 317 pounds of butterfat a year as compared to an average production of only 4,359 pounds of milk and 170 pounds of butterfat for all cows milking in the United States.

Association cows not only produce more milk and butterfat on the average than all cows milked in the country, but they also produce it more economically. The association cows which produced at the same average rate as all cows consumed approximately $53 worth of feed per cow and returned $33 above cost of feed to the owner. However, the average association cow producing 317 pounds of fat consumed $71 worth of feed and made a return of $98 above cost of feed. In other words, the cows that averaged 170 pounds of fat consumed $1.22 worth of feed for every 100 pounds of milk they produced, while cows that averaged 317 pounds fat consumed only 91 cents worth of feed for every 100 pounds of milk produced.

The same relationship exists between low and high producing herds. Dairymen with herds having an average production of 395 pounds fat per cow received $120 above feed costs while dairymen with herds having an average of 206 pounds of fat received only $53 above feed costs per cow. Stated in another way, a dairyman would need to keep only half as many cows if they averaged 395 pounds, to obtain the same return as he received with 206-pound cows—just half as many cows to milk and feed to realize approximately the same return over feed cost.

Fence Posts Require Chemical Preservatives

With the annual replacement of posts required each year, it is easy to understand why many farmers inquire about giving chemical treatment to their fence posts to make them last longer. There are two principal types of treatment which have been developed; namely, the tar or creosote method, applied by dipping or submerging well seasoned posts into hot creosote; and the relatively new method of applying a zinc poison to freshly cut posts, using the natural process of sap movement to absorb the poison into the wood.

The zinc poison is proving very practical for farmers with woodlands containing willow, poplar, ash, basswood, and soft maple trees of cordwood size; yet this tire-tube method of treatment, as it is called, will work well on trees of almost any species.

The preservative used in the tire-tube method is known as zinc chloride. It is extremely poisonous to insects as well as to rotting fungi, but it has one weakness—it slowly dissolves and is carried out of the post by rain and ground water; yet if it is properly applied, it will add many years to the life of even such fast rotting woods as cottonwood and aspen or poplar.

The posts to be treated must be strictly fresh and green, and the bark must be left on. Dried or split posts will not take the chemical by this method. Posts from four to six inches in diameter at the small end are most easily treated.

Youthful Tailored Two-Piece Frock

SEASON in and season out, the whole year round, you need a two-piece tailored suit-frock like 1875-B. It's ideal for business, classroom wear and general spectator sports. The collarless neckline, besides being very smart, gives you a chance to indulge your fancy for sports jewelry and scarfs.

The skirt is full and circular, and of course you can wear it with your lingerie blouses, too. The jacket-blouse has unusually attractive bodice detailing, with stitched seams emphasized by two little flat pockets, placed just where slim figures need them! It is fitted in to hug the waistline, and the shoulders are gallantly squared, to make it look even more slender. Constipation Relief

That Also
Pepsin-izes Stomach

When constipation brings on acid indigestion, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, sour taste, and bad breath, your stomach is probably loaded up with certain undigested food and your bowels don't move. So you need both Pepsin to help break up fast that rich undigested food in your stomach, and Laxative Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels. So be sure your laxative also contains Pepsin. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative, because its Syrup Pepsin helps you gain that wonderful stomach-relief, while the Laxative Senna moves your bowels. Tests prove the power of Pepsin to dissolve those lumps of undigested protein food which may linger in your stomach, to cause belching, gastric acidity and nausea. This is how pepsinizing your stomach helps relieve it of such distress. At the same time this medicine wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your bowels to relieve your constipation. So see how much better you feel by taking the laxative that also puts Pepsin to work on that stomach discomfort, too. Even finicky children love to taste this pleasant family laxative. Buy Dr. Caldwell's Laxative—Senna with Syrup Pepsin at your druggist today!

AND THERE IS LIGHT IN THE PARK !

Last week this column called the attention to the need for a light in the Klemme Park. The forces that be operated fast and by Thursday night there was a light burning brightly in the Park!

It seems that the fault did not lie with local officials, but Marshall Buseman forwarded a copy of the write-up to the Central States Electric Co. at Garner, who are supposed to keep the Klemme streets supplied with light bulbs. They sent a man down here immediately to make the correction . . and there is a light!

AMPLE HOMESTEAD
FUNDS. . .

Following on the heals of announcements that most of the special funds collected by the state entirely aside from real estate levies have reacted to Republican administration in record-breaking manner, records of the state comptroller's show that full legal tax exemptions on Iowa homesteads are assured. The homestead exemption act is probably the most valuable measure ever enated for the home owner. Designed and enacted by a Republican legislature over the veto of Clyde Herring, then governor, the homestead exemption law is guarded jealously by Republican administrators against the direct or indirect attack. After old age pension and other requirements are met from funds set aside for this purpose it is expected that about $6,437,000 will be available for homestead exemption. This is ample to meet the full legal 25 mill refund on the lawful maximum of $2,500. The largest refund any home owner can receive is $62.50.

I-S-A-S

NO BUCK PASSING . .

A clipping reaches this desk from a newspaper which questions the truth of a statement declaring state taxes have been lowered, and calls "passing the buck" a reference to an increase of upwards of $3,000,000 in county, school and municipal levies. The author of the clipping either misunderstood or read his information carelessly In spite of additional allowances of $1,500,000 granted by the legislature to old age assistance, and increased appropriations for bettering living conditions in state mental institutions, there were no increases in the state levy. Nor was it lowered No such claim has been made. The state levy remains the same. The increases as set out were made possible by more careful and economical administration. School boards, city councils and county boards prepare their own levies entirely independent of the state. Their only connection with state government is in the filing of local budget estimates with the comptroller.

About Rugs

Sheep that live in the mountains furnish the long course wool needed for making wool rugs and carpets.

American sheep have the short fine wool which is used for making cloth and clothing. The wool from North and South America is not suitable for rugs.

Now it happens that the sheep who furnish wool for rugs and carpets live in Europe, Asia and China. These people are at war and it is almost impossible to get that wool to America in sufficient quantities to supply the needs of our people. Thence, rugs and carpets will be high in price for the duration of this war!

Self-Reliance

Trust thyself: every heart vibrates to that iron string Accept the place, the Devine Providense has found for you, the society of your contemporaries, the connection of events. Great men have always done so, and confided themselves childlike to the genius of their age, betraying their perception that the absolutely trustworthy was seated at their heart, working through their hands, predominating in all their being. And we are now men, and must accept in the highest mind the same transcendent destiny; and not minor and invalids in a protected corner not cowards fleeing before a revolution, but guides, redeemers and benefactors, obeying the Almighty effort and advancing on Chaos and the Dark.

AROUND K. H. S.

The sophmore class had a combination ice-skating and skiing party Monday at Fuller's pond south of Klemme. The ice was cleared and some of the students skated. The rest went up to the hills and found that ski-ing was excellent. After skating, they went and rested by the fire and drank cocoa.

All the high school students took semester tests, on Thursday and Friday of last week. They had vacation on Friday afternoon.

The senior home economics girls made pies last Monday. They made pineapple, coconut cream, black raspberry, peach, and banana pies Tuesday they prepared their left over fruit. They made coconut puddings, black raspberry pudding peach, lemon jello, tapioca with pinapple, and banana, orange milk shakes. The girls have studied the different types of luncheons and breakfasts. They also planned the meals for an entire week and took precaution to see that their meals were balanced and that their expenses were kept down.

The American literature students plan to try their hand at writing poetry. They don't hope to find any great poets but they all agree that it will be interesting.

The business arithmetic students finished their study of the different types of insurance. The class has now completed that course and they will take bookkeeping next semester. Some of the juniors also plan to take it.

The freshman home economics girls completed their luncheon unit last week.

Girl Scout News

The Klemme Girl Scouts have been very fortunate in having special talent in their first two meetings of the New Year Last week Mrs. Asher of Forest City dressed in her Norwegian Holiday Costume, told the Girl Scouts and their friends and teachers how wool is sheared and cleaned and then showed them how it is carded and spun into thread to be dyed or made into garments and then dyed. Everyone was fascinated by the whir of the spinning wheel and many tried to card the wool (which looked easy but didn't prove to be so).She told us many interesting facts about her old home in Norway.

This Monday evening at our regular meeting, Mrs. Missman, gave us a talk on "My Experiences In The World War." We all enjoyed this very much and continue to hope and pray that America will always stand for Peace.

Lost Game.

Two weeks after the final gun sounded, Iowa Falls won a basketball game and Eagle Grove lost, 36 to 35. When the contest was originally played, an Eagle Grove boy shot a basket almost simultaneously with the final gun. The score keeper recorded the basket, claiming that the ball was in the air when the game ended. The time keeper was looking at his watch so could not say positively. The dispute was referred to the Iowa high school athletic association and the "buck" was passed back to Referee Chas Quinn, who ruled that the basket did not count

Famous Southern Song Had Origin in New York

Daniel Decatur Emmett, famous organizer of the first minstrel show in 1843, wrote "Dixie" for Dan Bryant's minstrels in 1859. He was a native of Mount Vernon, Ohio, and his father, a Virginian of Irish descent, was an abolitionist in his sympathies. The young man became a musician attached to a traveling circus and his work included the composing or adapting of many Negro melodies. One Saturday night after the minstrel show in New York, Bryant asked him to write a "walk-around" for Monday. Next day it was cold and rainy and as he looked out of his window he remembered the oft-expressed wish of Negroes with the circus when fall days came, "I wish I was in Dixie." He wrote the song in half an hour. It was popular in the North before it was even sung in the South. The melody was adapted by him from an old tune his mother used to sing to him.

After it was picked up by the South, Emmett declared that his song was responsible for the prolongation of the war, its stirring refrain stimulating discouraged men to further effort. One writer says: "The new republic needed a song, something that would call men from their plows and stir their hearts into a frenzy of emotion. The band played 'The Bonny Blue Flag' and the crowd cheered mildly. And then 'Dixie.' The crowd caught its breath and then went mad. Women pressed around the musicians and showered them with flowers.

The song was the soul of the people. After Appomattox ended the war, northern attention was called to the song when President Lincoln said that the famous tune now belonged to the nation, having been captured in the war. It lost its sectionalism, becoming almost a national anthem.

Extensive Study Reveals New Atmospheric 'Pulse'

There are pulse beats in the atmosphere with time periods ranging from six hours to fifty-six years. This is revealed by a detailed mathematical analysis of the barometric pressure readings which have been made for more than 60 years on the island of Mauritius, a British colony in the Indian ocean near Madagascar. The pulse beats are completely intermingled, and it was necessary to submit the curve showing the mixed pulsating record to harmonic analysis which separated the pulses of particular frequencies.

The readings were handled in two groups, one giving the continuous daily record, and the other giving the average pressure by years. The latter showed a 56 year cycle that seemed to be associated with a rainfall cycle of the same period. Pressure cycles of 17 years and of nine years were found. Study over a longer period may reveal that the latter are multiples or submultiples of each other. An annual cycle was found with a minimum in mid-February, the time of highest temperature.

The continuous daily records showed that the strongest component was not the 24 hour cycle, but the 12 hour, the latter having twice the amplitude of the former. The third largest daily factor was the eight-hour cycle, with about half the amplitude of the 24 hour cycle The smallest factor was the six hour cycle. These various cycles appear to be independent of each other insofar as each exhibits independent phase changes.

Polish Hillbillies

In Poland a hillbilly is called a Hucul, which is pronounced "Hootzool" The Polish version of our southern mountaineers wear far more picturesque costumes than the American highlanders, they are as much addicted to the music of the fiddle and they are even more "sot" in their ways, which are very quaint, indeed. A good many American travelers have become acquainted with the Huculs in the past few years. Some of them penetrated the eastern Carpathians as members of art study groups who haunt these mountains every summer and others were tourists who rode "cruising" trains that carry skiparties on eight day trips from Cracow into the remote and beautiful regions where the mountaineers live.

Bamboo Replaces Iron

Athos Albertoni and Alessandro Paoloni, Italian engineers, have discovered a process by which bamboo, fast-growing tropical plant, may be utilized to replace iron in reinforcement of concrete for building and road construction. The new process is based on special treatment of bamboo to make it more adherent, and placing of bamboo sticks in patterns for maximum strength in the reinforcement operation. If the new method proves successful it will be a boon to Italian building industries, especially in the tropical colonies of Libya and Ethiopia, where weatherproofing of buildings against cold is not an important factor, and they can be constructed of lighter materials.

Long Time Between— Highly Taxed Alky Compensation Laws

Several large American firms, one of which is the F. W. Woolworth company, pay their chief executives only once a year.

When purchased by any organization other than a hospital or a scientific laboratory, a 55-gallon drum of pure alcohol, which sells for $15, carries a federal tax of $235.

While some states have not yet passed a workmen's compensation law, other states have been so liberal that they have granted workmen's compensation for such ailments as flat feet, writer's cramp and bedsores.—Collier's.

THE TRUTH SIMPLY TOLD

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of satisfactory use. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who test the value of Doan's under exacting laboratory conditions. These physicians, too, approve every word of advertising you read, the objective of which is only to recommend Doan's Pills as a good diuretic treatment for disorder of the kidney function and for relief of the pain and worry it causes.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warn of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!

DOAN'S PILLS

Revival of Brocade Tunes to Vogue for Fabric Elegance

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHEN in a dress-up mood, what to wear is the question. The revival of brocade among fabrics of high fashion, as announced for spring, may well be regarded as a perfectly good answer to the query.

The big news is the neat-patterned brocades in necktie silk effects that make up into most wearable daytime frocks that are dressy at the same time that they are eminently practical.

If you are looking for a daytime frock that will guarantee style distinction take note of the three swank afternoon types here illustrated. The material used for this trio of exceptionally smart fashions is the new-this-season brocade of damask-woven bemberg rayon. You can get it in monotone or two-color effects, its high and low luster filaments producing a handsome brocade patterning. If you are your own seamstress, buy a few yards of this attractive brocade, provide yourself with a reliable pattern and turn on power for your electric sewing machine. However, if you are not enamored with the thought of being your own dressmaker you will find modes similar to the ones pictured easily available in shops and dress sections throughout style centers.

Looking at the illustration you sense at a glance that the new brocades yield perfectly to high-styling. Per example the gown to the right says it with "style" definitely. This peplum dress is figure-fitting and flattering. The brocade that fashions it is in a violet-leaf motif damask-woven patterning. A self-fabric bow at the belt and the high neck closing is the only ornamentation, for material such as this handsome brocade exemplifies the thought that "beauty unadorned is adorned the most."

Centered in the picture is one of the season's best-loved fashions—the princess silhouette that is artfully fitted at the waistline with the skirt that is gently flared. A flower-patterned damask of bemberg rayon is used for this model.

To the left a figure-molding afternoon dress in a richly brocaded ballet dancing patterning holds forth in the illustration. The high-necked bodice is enhanced with a large old-fashioned brooch.

Designers are making varied uses of brocade. Milliners welcome this new damask-woven material as perfect for the very stylish draped turbans for which everybody is calling. These bright colorful bits of headwear are charming with winter furs.

Add a handbag of the same brocade and the ensemble will prove a delight to the eye. One even sees shoes made of brocade, likewise scarfs and belts.

The jacket suit made of the neat necktie-patterned brocade will be featured later on in the spring, its charm accented with the prettiness of a blouse of the daintiest lace-trimmed lingerie type.

New-Length Sleeve

Sleeve lengths grow capricious. The type most called for and one new in the field today is the bracelet-length sleeve. The dress pictured is so sleeved. Another feature in current styling is that dresses are subtly designed to achieve "lines" that take inches off the strategic points so as to slim the figure according to fashion's way of thinking. Details that accomplish this feat in the gown pictured are wide shoulders so as to make the waistline look smaller in comparison, darts above the waistline to accent the new "nipped in" look, and smoothness around the hips. Soutache scrolls trim this frock which is fashioned of moss-green sheer wool.

Pastel Lame Turbans

For a glowing accompaniment to dark dinner suit, oriental turbans draped pastel lame are a new ggestion.

Red Shoes Novel Touch at Resorts

If you would keep tab on coming events that "cast their shadows before," watch the style parade that is traveling the highways and beaches in southern sun-bright resorts. One thing your amazed eyes will see is red shoes. They are being worn with all types of costumes.

Worn with slacks they add a most zestful novelty touch. Look too clever for words with simple little gingham dresses, in fact with any type of casual daytime frocks, also good-looking with white afternoon dresses and tailleurs.

Now comes the sequence of this fashion story. As everybody knows, what's worn at the southern resorts in midwinter sets precedent for spring and summer fashions to come. Wherefore, the message that red shoes will be worn with tailored beige or navy street costumes has already winged its way northward. So if you crave fashion thrills, buy a pair of red shoes.

Fruit Motifs of Pasted Feathers

For a gay splotch of color on your hat ask your milliner to show you the new fruit trims, done in pasted feathers. Plums, apples, pears, bananas, and so on are down the list. These motifs, in realistic colors, are to be appliqued on crown or brim or where you will on your hat. Buy an extra one to attach to the lapel of your coat.

Cloth Joined Up With Surah Print

Considerable emphasis is given in the advance costume displays to ensembles that are made of cloth combined with surah print, the latter used for, perhaps, the blouse, to line the coat and to serve as color accent on pocket, neckline and sleeve finishings.

Glove Note

Even short gloves this season may be fastened with elaborate buttons. Screen Player Virginia Vale has a pair made of black suede, buttoned with tiny gold filigree beads.

A NEW STANDARD OF GREATNESS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 20:17-28.
GOLDEN TEXT—While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.—Romans 5:8.

The nations of the earth and their leaders are engaged in a struggle to determine which land and which leader is to be the greatest. They may attempt to conceal their real motive under a cloak of high-minded and well-sounding objectives, but essentially the reason for their struggle is the desire to be great. To them greatness means size, strength, wealth, and position. It means that also to the average man on the street. What a pity it is that such is the case and that such a vicious and erroneous philosophy of life has been permitted to make its way even into the Church.

The world's ideas of greatness are entirely opposite to God's standards. God's people ought to learn what His ideals of life are and to live in accordance with them even in an unbelieving world. Both they and the world would be astonished at the result.

I. Dying for Others (vv. 17-19).

With surprising clarity and detail the Lord Jesus once more revealed to His disciples that He was on His way to Jerusalem to die and to arise again. It is well worthwhile to note that apart from divine foreknowledge and inspiration it would have been utterly impossible for Him to give these facts in such exact detail.

The point we wish to stress is that the Son of God was steadfastly approaching the death of Calvary. He had no desire to live for self, to gratify His own wishes, to prolong His life, or to improve His position in the world. He had come to do but one thing, the will of God, even to the shameful death of the cross, there to bear your sins and mine. Let us give ourselves in loyal devotion to our dying and risen Lord.

II. Living for Self (vv. 20-24).

Were it not written for us to read, we could hardly believe that the two disciples, James and John, who were so very near to our Lord, and their mother, who was a woman of earnest faith and sacrificial service to God, would be guilty of such an expression of selfishness, especially in that sacred hour when He had spoken of His approaching death. Disregarding what Jesus had said about His sufferings, they apparently could think only of His coming glory, and in thinking of that they could only covet for themselves the chief places. What a strange mixture of faith in Christ and an overwhelming desire for self-glory!

Perchance some of us have served Christ with a selfish desire for personal glory and position putting itself forward to influence our thinking and acting. Perhaps we do not see it in ourselves, but are like the other disciples who, seeing this hateful thing in John and James, were repelled by it, even as we despise it in others. It may be that the disciples were only angry because they had not thought to make the request for themselves.

III. Finding True Greatness (vv. 25-28).

"Rulers," "greatness," "exercise authority" — how modern these words from verse 25 sound! They epitomize the ambitions of the great majority of mankind today. Few indeed are those in the world who see the way to true greatness as that of the lowly Jesus. In every instance where they do rightly apprehend and live out this truth, one is satisfied that somewhere in their experience they have come to know His principles of life even though they do not know Him. Only in Him is such an attitude toward life to be found.

To be great one is to serve in the spirit of humility and self-sacrifice. This is the command of Christ. Even in the Church there are not too many who have heeded that word. If there were more of this spirit we woud have less church quarrels, for essentially they root back to the desire for greatness. We may not admit that fact, but it is none the less true.

One wonders how great some of the pillars of the Church would look measured against the standard of verses 26 to 28. One wonders too how many of the humble workers of the Church realize their true greatness. Such greatness of heart is great simply because it does not so regard itself.

For Thy Name's Sake

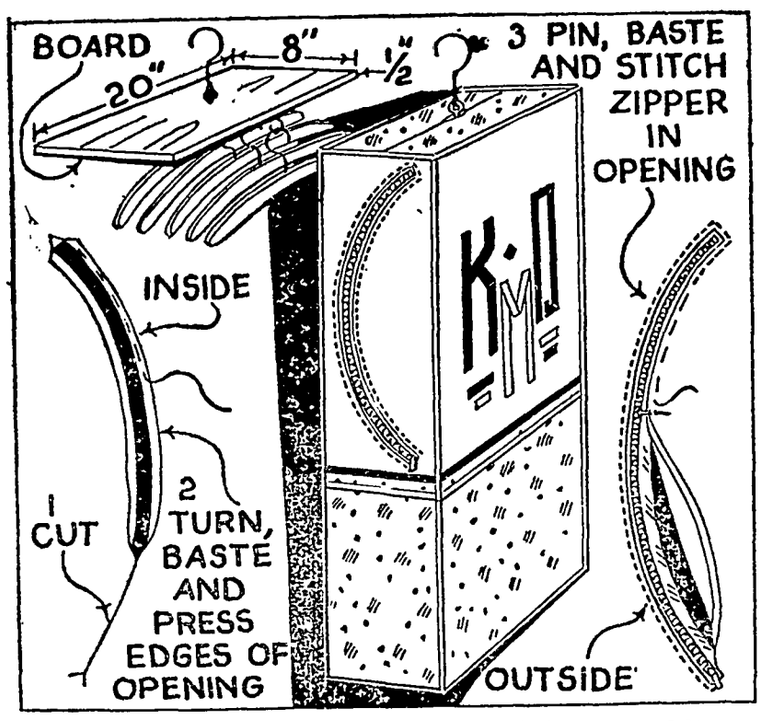
But do thou for me, O God the Lord, for thy name's sake; because thy mercy is good, deliver thou me. For I am poor and needy, and my heart is wounded within me.—Psalm 109, 21:22.

Jesus Asks Evidence

That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, but they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17, 21.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: I thought you might be interested in how I made garment bags for each member of my family, almost entirely from things I had on hand. The foundation part of each was made of ½-inch board; a screw-eye; a hook from a hanger; and five small screw hooks underneath. For the bag, I combined muslin flour sacks with odds and ends of figured cottons and trimmed the joinings with bias tape. I followed your directions in SEWING Book 2, for initials of bias tape to mark the bags."

At the upper left is sketched the foundation that this reader used. If a zipper is used for the opening, the 36-inch length is best. If you put it in a curved line, you will have a wider opening. Each step in applying the zipper in this way is shown here.

THE AMERICAN SPIRIT

"IF EVERY citizen will cease to look to Washington in his moment of stress and strain, and individually assume the responsibility of self-improvement, of self-advancement, of self-preservation, I believe the turning point then may be reached, and from that instant we begin again to be a happy, a contented, a prosperous people with eyes raised high to greet a new day. This is the American way, this is the American creed, this is the American spirit."—U. S. Representative Albert E. Austin.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR JACOB BACHMAN, 74, AT GOODELL OBITUARY

Jacob David Bachman was born July 23, 1865, at Baden, Germany, the third of a family of eight children born to his parents, Michael Bachman and Gertrude Schmitt.

At the age of three years, Jacob, together with his parents, and his two brothers, Henry and William migrated to America, they first settled at Ackley, Iowa, where the father found employment as a teamster. Later they farmed near Belmond, and finally the father purchased a farm near Klemme, where Fred Bachman now lives. Here he completed his education in the rural schools and learned the business of farming

In 1885, at the age of 21, Jacob Bachman and Laura Belle Bowers were married. They commenced housekeeping on the farm where the Town of Klemme now stands. Four children were born to this union: Mable, who died in 1916; Clarice, Mrs. Lew Remer of Garner, Iowa; Lena, Mrs. Ben Remer of LeMars, Iowa, and Roy Bachman of Goodell

Jacob Bachman and family lived in Avery township for several years. Most of these years were spent on the Henry Nannaga farm which Mr. Bachman owned at the time.

In 1895, the Jacob Bachman family moved to the town of Goodell, where Mr Bachman worked at the trade of Stone Mason and Plastering. Later for about eight years, he was janitor of the Goodell schools His wife preceeded him in death on December 7, 1937

About three years ago, Jacob Bachman, suffered from a kidney ailment. One kidney was removed at that time, and lately the other kidney caused the trouble which ended his career at 4 p. m. Friday, January 19th, 1940.

He reached the age of 74 years 5 months, and 27 days

He leaves beside his three children: 1 sister, Mrs. George Griggs, Avery township; 2 brothers, Fred and John of Avery township; 7 grand children, and other more distant relatives and friends.

The Funeral Service was in charge of Art Wellemeyer and was conducted by the Rev. Lloyd J. Patton, at the U. B. Church in Goodell Monday afternoon. The interment was made in the Amsterdam Cemetery, beside his wife

Music was furnished by a male quartette consisting of Wilmer E Burk, J. J. Cook, Amos Hanson and A. C. Carpenter They were accompanied by Mrs J. J Cook.

The Casket Bearers were: Paul Velthaus, Elmer Keneberger, Chas. Conklin, Homer Ness, Evert Early and Edgar Mayhew.

WANT MORE WHITE CORN FOR MILLING PURPOSES

There has been a shortage of white corn for the past 2 years and as a result there is a small but insistent demand for white corn on the market, says E. S. Dyas, agronomist in the Extension Service of Iowa State College.

The agronomist pointed out that the American Corn Millers Federation is now conducting a campaign to increase the acreage of white corn.

White corn has commanded a premium as high as 8 to 10 cents a bushel at certain points in the last 2 years," he said.

At present the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station does not have enough seed of white corn hybrids for distribution. It is expected however, that white hybrid seed will be available from the station at some future date.

STANDARD BEARER NEWS

The local Standard Bearers held their meeting in the church basement last Wednesday.

After the business meeting, Shirley led us in a dues paying ritual wherein we pledge ourselves to the society All dues have been paid so a candle was lighted for each girl These candles encircled a globe to represent our contact with missions in foriegn countries. Mrs. Elder read us a most interesting letter from Miss Koether, a missionary who is on her way to China. She wrote while on board ship.

A pot luck supper was served Mrs. Schaeffer baked a huge birthday cake for the occasion, as this is the Standard Bearers 39th birthday.

Mrs. Bridges then told us the last chapter of the "Garden of Jewels". It was most interesting.

A dramatization of the life of Clara Cushman, the founder of Standard Bearers, was given with the assistance of Jackie, Marian, Shirley, and Miss Merritt. Several short reports were given by the girls. Mrs. Schaeffer led devotions.

New Farm Unit Formed In Iowa

Officers of the Iowa branch of the Farmers' Guild last week told of their organization and plans to fight for the old Farmers' Union objective of cost of production.

Officers of the Iowa guild are Rueben Blake, Oelwein, Ia, president; Joe F. Gardner, Waverly, Ia, secretary and treasurer; Walter W. Meyne, Readlyn, Ia, chairman committee on organization along with A. C. Shallock and Theodore Riekert of Clarksville, Ia, as members of the committee Meyne also is director of the national organization.

Northeastern Iowa

Membership of the Guild is largely in northeastern Iowa to date. It is the second organization to be formed in Iowa from the nucleus of the original Iowa Farmers' Union. The Progressive Farmers Union has its principal strength in northwestern Iowa after it was formed with a membership which had bolted the leadership of the late Milo Reno

One of the prime movers in the National Farmers Guild is Edward E. Kennedy, formerly of Greene county, Iowa, and a former national secretary of the National Farmers Union.

The National Farmers Union during the last few years has tended to favor the AAA and the administration setup although in some states the membership has refused to go along with this trend and has insisted on the cost of production plan of farm relief.

Program

Following is the legislative program of the Guild as announced by Iowa officers of the organization last week.

1. Cost of production for farmers through the regulation of minimum prices and marketing
2. Providing and protecting the home market for American farmers.
3. Refinancing of farmers indebtness at low interest—amortized repayment plan—funds provided by government issue of currency.
4. Restoration to congress of the power to coin and regulate the value of money.
5. Taxation based on ability to pay.
6. Abolishment of the system of issuing tax-exempt government bonds.
7. Constitutional authority for the initiation of legislative measures by the citizens.
8. Protection of and assistance to bonafide farmers' co-operatives
9 The conservation of natural water resources, the preservation of peace and the encouragement and protection of home ownership

Beautiful Display Of Sun Dogs Friday And Saturday Mornings

Those in North Iowa who happened to take a look southeastward on Friday and Saturday mornings of the past week between 7:45 and 8:30 o'clock saw a beautiful display of sun dogs The unusual display was very bright and at times had the many colors of the rainbow.

The appearance of sun dogs is said to be a sign of continued cold weather. North Iowa experienced sub-zero weather the past week with the low mark of 23 degrees below zero Thursday morning, January 18th.

SHAMROCKS DOWN BULL DOGS IN CONFERENCE GAME HELD FRIDAY EVE

Little Shamrocks Add Another Victory To Their String Of Wins

In their last game before the county tournament, the Klemme Shamrocks completely outclassed the Kanawha Bull Dogs to win by a score of 30 to 15 in a game played on the local floor Friday night. After an exciting first quarter in which the visitors poked in fancy shots from different angles to lead by 8 to 7, the locals gradually pulled away and were never in danger after the first half.

So effective was the Shamrock defense in the second and third quarters that Kanawha was able to count only two points in that entire time. A work-out of Coach Bowles' "scissor" technique toward the end of the first half completely baffled the Bull Dogs There was a five minute period which they hardly got their hands on the ball.

Klemme started the game minus the services of two regulars, Barz and Stille, who had been on the sick list. Barz entered the game, however, before the first half was over and put in enough time during the evening to lead the scoring with a total of ten points Garland Brinkman, starting his first game on the first team, came through with eight points, scoring on three field goals and a pair of free throws. Grange played a nice game in the back court and found time to gather in six points Buseman, Grosshuesch, and Jacobs each contributed two points to the winning cause, and Zabilka and Coobs got in for some lively action.

For Kanawha, Thompson was high point man with nine points. and Jackson took runner-up honors with three

In the preliminary game, the Little Shamrocks rolled over the Kanawha reserves by a score of 16 to 5. Brinkman did his warming up exercises in this game, getting six points Harold Swalve got four, and Bock, Jacobs and Schulz each got two.

Ready For Tournament

Coach Bowles is pointing his team this week for the county tournament. The Shamrocks see action first on Thursday evening, when they meet the winner of the Goodell-Crystal Lake game This game and most of the others in the tournament should be worth seeing Local fans feel that Klemme has a good chance to wade through the toughest opposition the county has to offer and will be on hand to cheer the team on.

Doctor Townsend Says.....

JUST as this is a different world from that to which we elders were born, we may be sure it will change again for each new generation, and we must meet each change that comes. We know there was a world without telephones, without electricity, without automobiles, and without airplanes. We still wonder how people lived in such an age. But there will be much greater changes in the days to come. Unless we learn how to adapt ourselves, new inventions will be useless. Very soon, unemployment will be as unthinkable as human slavery. The right to work will become as inalienable as the right to life, or the right to breathe.

COUNSEL IDENTIFIED

During the hearing of a case in an American court counsel confronted each other for the first time.

"You dirty, double-crossing four-flusher," snarled one. "I'll show you up for the crooked ape you are."

"Oh, yeah!" returned the other. "You needn't take that line with me, you ham-faced liar."

At this point the judge intervened.

"Now that learned counsel have identified each other, the case will proceed," he announced.

Sparkle of Diamonds Latest Fashion Tendency in Jewelry

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THIS should not be the winter of your discontent, not when you can solve the major clothes problem so simply and smartly as fashion makes it possible for women of discriminating taste to do this season.

If your winter is composed of many evenings when you like to dress up a little and a few evenings when you really must dress up a lot, according to Muriel King, one of our leading American designers, the one-gown evening wardrobe composed of a sheath in either black or dark crepe or of satin if you prefer, plus a number of flattering blouses will solve the problem nicely. To glorify this costume with distinctive accent, wear one important piece of jewelry rather than a bizarre display of jewels en masse.

As approved and adopted by ladies of fashion, the formula calls for a well-fitted sheath gown (dark crepe or satin) as decollette as your most formal evening dates may require. Supplement this with one or more blouses, sleeves either long or short, neckline either high or low, whichever is more becoming. One pair of slippers will serve several costumes, but change your hair-do according to mood and remember that much depends upon the jewelry you wear.

The costume centered in the illustration demonstrates the proposition of the basic sheath gown that is styled with exquisite simplicity, its extreme decollette tuning it to most formal occasion. Accented, as you see, by a single important jewel. Brilliants are now used extensively, each tiny gem cut with 58 facets or planes, to catch the light from angle and focus all the radiance on you.

For less formal occasion the gown may be worn with a modish over-blouse as pictured to the right. And you don't necessarily have to abide by black, for this dinner dress, by Muriel King, is in bottle green for the sheath and soft pink for the blouse. Note the new longer length for this blouse. The clip brooch on the bodice is really quite a jewelry collection in itself, in that it separates into a diamond-mounted emerald brooch and two diamond clips. There is much to be said in favor of a three-way jewelry piece like this in that it offers versatile uses. For other occasions you can wear a black lace bolero with your sheath and endless other suggestions could be offered.

The same sparkle of diamonds that illumines by night on formal clothes radiates by day on select daytime costumes. An outstanding gesture this season is a single piece of worthwhile jewelry worn with your best tailleur ensemble or pinned at a vantage point on your fur coat. We are going to describe the handsome jewelry piece worn by this smartly tailored debutante pictured to the left. Here's where things are growing exciting for there's a watch in the picture and the question is, where is it? You suspect some part of the pendant brooch? Right you are and the place to look is on the smooth side of the dangling diamond ball. This ball reverses toward you on a pivot, so that your eyes look right down into the face of time.

The practical side of this pretty ornament is the fact that you almost never break your watch crystal. You just couldn't. You'll see pendants pinned to all the best lapels in spring suits.

Pastel Prints

The new incoming silk prints bring the message of soft, lovely, pastel colorings. Shown here is a silk spectator sports dress for resort wear printed in pale blues and greens made with classic shirt top and pleated skirt. This is nicely accented by a wine and natural colored straw hat.

Jewelry Contrasts

Jewelry in deep tones of the same color is an effective contrast for evening frocks.

Watch Pockets Are Highly Important

In the realm of dress design pockets are the center of attraction this season. Now that they have become the plaything of designers don't be surprised to find a pocket or a whole flock of pockets positioned anywhere on your new dress, coat or blouse.

The list runs the gamut from huge saddlebag pockets down to tiny decorative affairs that are cunningly frivolous and whimsical. Then there are the new peg-top pockets that add so much style to the newer skirts. The new pouch pockets are interesting, so are the patch-pocket types in infinite variety. Kangaroo, sandwich and a host of other type pockets you'll be seeing too, so if you would be style-alert, watch pockets!

Such fine handwork is being lavished on pockets as shirring, tucking, intricate stitching, glamorous glittering embroidery and so on. The "pocket dress" (term recently adopted in fashion vocabulary) has become the popular theme of the moment.

Cowl-Shaped Skirt Late Style Touch

Cowl-like drapery is not limited to necklines in the elaborately cut gowns of this season. On an evening frock of white silk jersey, the skirt is cowl-draped from waist to floor. The bodice of the dress is gathered in graceful folds slanting from right shoulder to left waistline, with the drapery caught at the center of the bodice by a sweeping wing embroidered in gilt beads and gold sequins.

THE President's son plans to give us a mystery picture—made from one of the best mystery plays ever written—as the first release of his Globe Productions. It's "The Bat," by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood, and has everything that a thriller should have. It was filmed by Mary Pickford's company in 1926, and done again, as "The Bat Whispers," in 1931. Norman Foster will direct the new version.

If you are devoted to the story, "The Light That Failed," you'll like the picture version, which sticks to the original, even to the unhappy ending. If it's Ronald Colman, rather than the story, who's responsible for your interest in the picture, you'll enjoy it hugely, for he gives an excellent performance.

So do Walter Huston, Dudley Digges, and Ida Lupino. Miss Lupino has had a hard time of it in Hollywood; she was put into ingenue parts and kept there; now that, at last, she had been given a chance to show what she could do with a real role, she had made the most of it.

Hers is rather like the one in "Of Human Bondage" that established Bette Davis as a dramatic actress. Miss Lupino's performance is good enough to do as much for her. No longer can she be thought of as just one of those pretty blondes who are so numerous in the picture-making metropolis.

If you're interested in the present activities of former radio favorites, here's news of some of them. Jimmy Melton is now known as James Melton, and is a concert singer. Morton Downey wound up his summer engagement at the World's fair and followed it with an equally successful one in a Hollywood night club. Singin' Sam is making money by making recordings.

Jessica Dragonnette makes occasional appearances on the air—and when you see "Gulliver's Travels" you'll hear her voice. Vera Van, Leah Ray and Annette Henshaw have retired.

Gene Autry, the singing screen star who is Public Cowboy No. 1, heads a new western series from "The Double M Ranch" over the Columbia network each Sunday. Incidentally, did you know that Gene was discovered by the beloved Will Rogers? Rogers stopped at a small town in Oklahoma to forward his syndicated column; Gene, the telegraph operator, was singing a western ballad. Rogers advised him to capitalize on his talents—and a little more than a year later Gene Autry was a popular radio and recording artist.

Del Courtney, who features Candid Camera music over NBC, has borrowed an idea from the movies in his presentation of "previews" of his forthcoming programs. Before concluding his broadcasts, he plays a few bars of some of the new tunes to be featured on the next program. It's a novel idea, and will probably be widely copied by bandleaders who don't hesitate to imitate their more successful brethren.

ODDS AND ENDS—The New York Film Critics picked "Wuthering Heights" as 1939's best picture . . . It's a little more than twenty-six years since Cecil B. De Mille, Samuel Goldwyn and Jesse Lasky began filming "The Squaw Man," the first motion picture made in Hollywood.

JESUS DRAMATICALLY PROCLAIMS HIS MESSIAHSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 21:1-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—Behold, thy King cometh unto thee.—Matthew 21:5.

The official presentation of Himself to the Jewish people as their King, their rejection of Him, and what was even more solemnly meaningful, His rejection of the Hebrew nation because of unbelief—such are the stirring events which face us as we enter with our Lord into the last week of His earthly life. The first event in that sequence is the one we study in our lesson for today, namely, the coming of the King to Jerusalem. Jesus on this occasion did a very dramatic and unusual thing, a fact which indicates that here is an incident of extraordinary import to which we do well to give careful study.

I. Preparation and Presentation (vv. 1-7).

The King comes, but even in His hour of royal triumph He gives to His followers the unexplainable but inestimable joy of meeting His need.

1. "The Lord Hath Need" (vv. 1-4). He had need of disciples who would do His bidding without question or hesitation—"and the disciples went, and did even as Jesus had appointed them" (v. 6). How precious is such obedience! Let us also go and do what He commands.

He needed the colt and the ass. How simple and lowly was that need, and yet how glorious that a man was ready to meet it! God's plans are worked out in the little things as well as the great. Prophecy was being fulfilled here (see v 5) by a little thing. Is God waiting to carry out some great purpose through some little thing which you are withholding from Him? Why hinder Him any longer?

2. "Behold Thy King Cometh" (vv. 5-7). Though He did not come with the pomp and trappings of an earthly potentate, the King of Glory came to His people to offer them for the last time the opportunity to receive Him. He asks you to yield your life to His kingship. What will your answer be?

II. Acceptance and Rejection (vv. 8-11, 15, 16).

1. "The Multitude . . Cried . . Hosanna" (vv. 8-11). The fact that before the week was over many of the same voices cried, "Crucify Him!" should not obscure the fact that there were childlike believers (v. 16) who really had faith in Christ. There is something inspiring about that picture of enthusiasm and devotion. Real faith in Christ ought to result in a fervor of spirit which will stir our hearts and our cities. Are we not altogether too dead and formal in much of our worship today? Do we not need more holy enthusiasm for Christ and for His Church?

2. "The Chief Priests and Scribes . . . Were Sore Displeased" (vv. 15, 16). Small wonder, for not only had the children put them to open shame by recognizing the Christ whom they had ignored, but He had in turn ruined their polite religious racket which produced for them such a lovely profit. Mark this—when anyone is displeased with Jesus or with His true children or with His work on earth, you can be sure that there is a reason, and not a holy, upright or good reason either!

III. Judgment and Compassion (vv. 12-14).

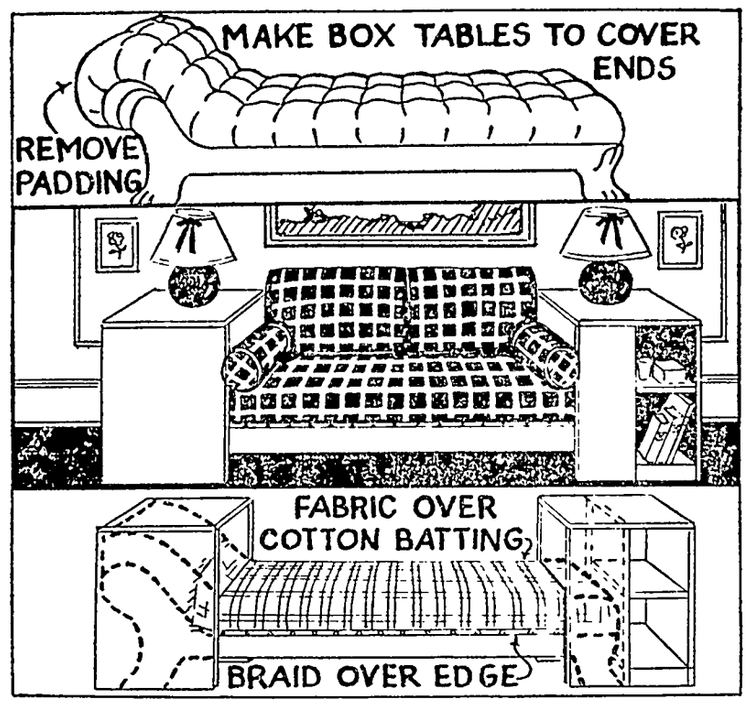
What a remarkable picture! In the midst of flaming judgment and destruction we find loving compassion upon the blind and the lame. Folk who think that Christ has no message but love need to look on Him as He cleanses the temple. On the other hand, those who think that He has no word but judgment need to behold Him as He stands in the midst of the overturned tables and debris and heals the needy. Inconsistent? Not at all. God is love, but He is also absolute holiness.

1. "Jesus Cast Out . . . and Overthrew" (vv. 12, 13). He knew where to begin to cleanse the city. He started in the temple. Absolutely right is the man who suggested that the place to start to clean up a city is not in the slums but in the churches. You will be ready to clean out the tavern or that other low place where the gang hangs out in your town after you have cleaned out the church. The same is true of the individual. A regenerated heart will bring a reformed life, not vice versa.

2. "He Healed Them" (v. 14). The very hands which had just overthrown the tables and cast out the money-changers now gently touched the lame and the blind with healing. The eyes which had blazed with holy indignation now shone with love and compassion. The scene of judgment and chaos became the house of prayer and of answered prayer. On the very spot where one man had received condemnation, another received healing. Each one received that which he sought by his action. How will you, my dear reader, meet Jesus—as your Judge or as your Saviour? You must make the choice.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



An old couch goes modern.

WAS there a couch like the picture at the top of this sketch, in the family "sitting room" when you were a child? Let's get it down from the attic, for just see what can be done with it! Properly streamlined it will look like the middle picture.

First paint the front of frame; then cover well up onto the head portion with cotton batting, next use bright cotton upholstery material. Remove stuffing at high end. Now, make box-like end tables like those illustrated. The dotted lines indicate how the couch fits under these box tables and how a partition and shelves are put in the one at the lower end. Paint tables to harmonize with fabric. The final touch is the back and end cushions covered with the upholstery material.

NOTE: Full directions for changing an old iron bed into the latest style, are given in Mrs. Spears' Book No. 3; also step-by-step directions for making "The Rug That Grew Up With the Family." Thirty-two pages of fascinating ideas for Homemakers. Ask for Book 3, enclosing 10 cents in coin to cover cost. Address; Mrs. Spears, Drawer 10, Bedford Hills, New York.

IT HAPPENS ONCE IN A LIFE TIME . . .

It only happens once in a lifetime . . . a perfect hand in cribbage, or any other card game.

Saturday evening Jack Runge and Dwight Hummel were playing cribbage at the Quandt Cafe, when Hummel dealt Runge a perfect hand of 29 points: 3 fives of hearts clubs, and diamonds and Jack of spades. Runge then drew the five of spades.

Mr. Quandt stated that he had seen thousands of hands of cribbage but this is the first time he had never seen a perfect hand. Cribbage is a popular past time at the Cafe and Mr. Quandt says he had seen a few 28 point hands. Jack was so thrilled with his perfect hand that he could hardly finish the game.

SPORTSMANSHIP URGED BY SCHOOL OFFICIALS HERE . .

Klemme has always been noted as having a lot of good sportsmen at basket ball games and other contests. Lest they forget themselves in the heat of an exciting game, local school officials hand out a printed slip at the gymnasium door to the fans as they enter Here are the rules:

LETS BE GOOD SPORTS

We have secured the best officials that is possible to get for our home games.

We are confident that these men do their very best to call a fair and impartial game.

We are sure that they have a more thorough knowledge of the rules than any of the spectators.

Therefore, won't you please help us preserve a good name for our school and our town by:

1. Refraining at all times from "booing" or heckling an official.
2. Remaining quiet when both the visiting and home team are shooting free throws.
3. Showing a genuine brand of good sportsmanship at all times.

And again this column is asked to come to the assistance of a worth while project that seems to have been sadly neglected this year . . . we refer to the skating rink that in past years has furnished a lot of good amusement and clean fun for the younger generation of Klemme.

The Town of Klemme owns a couple of vacant lots north of the Reformed Church that in past winters has been flooded with water by town officials for an ice skating rink. It seems the deal is that the Town is to flood the site, the skaters are to keep it free from snow and the Central States Electric Company provides the light.

Alright . . . whoever is responible, get together and let's have a skating rink! We are backed one hundred percent by the youth of Klemme for a rink! !

NOW YOU CAN DO IT TOO!

Here is fascinating news that concerns YOUR entire future! News that now brings Success and Happiness right to YOUR doorstep!

Walter P Chrysler: "Of great interest and value."

Wm Wrigley, Jr: "Thousands must have been waiting for something just like this."

Thomas A Edison: "Extremely interesting and of great practical value."

Only something unusual could bring similar praise from thousands of America's leading men and women

And something unusual HAS happened! — a book that concerns YOU and YOUR success and happiness.

It deals with the biggest problem you and all of us face The problem of 'getting along' with others, of making others like us, of influencing those with whom we come in contact in business, social and every-day life

Why is this your most important problem? Because ONLY through OTHERS is it possible for any of us to succeed — to get what we want from life. Your difficulties of today — your setbacks and successes of the past — do you not find other people always at the root of them — friend, relative employer employee, associate, superior?

Successful men and women recognize this need of influencing others as their most important life problem.

John D Rockefeller knew it when he said "Ability to deal with human nature is a 'commodity' for which I will pay more than for any other thing under the sun."

Andrew Carnegie knew it when he paid Charles Schwab a salary of a million dollars a year not for what he knows about making steel but because he knows how to please and influence people.

And Schwab knew it Many of us think of salesmen as people traveling around with sample kits. Instead we are ALL salesmen, every day of our lives. We are selling our ideas, our plans, our energies, our enthusiasm, to those with whom we come in contact "

That famous, startling scientific report recognized it: "Even in very technical lines, only 15 per cent of one's financial success is due to one's technical knowledge, and 85 per cent is due to personality and ability to influence and lead others." (RE-READ THAT AMAZING STATEMENT! It is, in exact essence the report of a long study by the Carnegie Institute of Technology!)

This all-important 'knack" of influencing and swaying others was for centuries mysteriously called personality," "magnetism," "charm." But modern science has been making breath taking discoveries!

Our great psychology laboratories have found that successful people exercise their great influence over others through a definite set of psychological 'laws' — simple but powerful rules which enable them to "handle people in every step in life

Mystery was entirely swept aside — the way was opened for all to master this tremendous power of influence over others — when Webb and Morgan gathered together these "laws" put them into a fascinating, easily-understood book, "Strategy in Handling People."

Now this book, which aroused such wholehearted enthusiasm from Chrysler, Edison, Wrigley and thousands of other successful people, is available to you — in its COMPLETE 260-page word-for-word form — at a price you can well afford!

No book like it has ever been written before. Fascinating as a detective story, it rips aside the curtain of "mystery Through dramatic incidents in the lives of over 200 successful people it explains exactly how they have used the set of "laws" to gain personal power and success and how YOU can do it.

It tells how YOUR OWN every-day problems have been solved by the world's ablest men and women — how YOU can use their simple, powerful method to increase your influence over the people around you — to make all people like you — to charm and impress friends and strangers — to handle superiors and subordinates — to get loyalty and cooperation — to size up people — to master difficult personal and business situations — to move swiftly toward the success you want!

TIME

It was once said that as every thread of gold is valuable, so is every moment of time. If time is the most precious of all things, then, to waste time must be a great sin. Therefore, it is wise to spend your time in nothing which you will be sorry for doing. Yesterday cannot be recalled; tomorrow cannot be assured; today is the day to make use of our time.

Much could be accomplished in the shreds and patches of time which many men throw away. Those who realize the value of time use it in preparation for great things. There is not a single moment in our lives which we can afford to lose. Time is money. Time has often cured a wound which reason failed to heal. Time is what we want most and use worst We will always have time enough if we use it correctly.

Longfellow once said, "What is time?--The shadow on the dial, the striking of the clock, the running of the sand, day and night, summer and winter, months, years, centuries-these are but the arbitrary and outward signs--the measure of time, not time itself. Time is the life of the soul."

Lost, yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they have gone forever! Count that day lost, whose slow descending sun views from thine hand no worthy action done

Militarists Expect War to Kill Itself If New Weapons Are Turned Loose

By GREGORY ADAMS
(Released by Western Newspaper Union)

WASHINGTON.—From the intense warfare expected to envelope Europe this year, American military and naval experts hope to tabulate their first authentic information regarding improved efficiency of modern fighting weapons.

In the 70 years that have elapsed since the Civil war—first modern conflict—the munitions of army and navy have assumed new sizes and shapes, becoming more deadly with each succeeding decade. But not since 1918, when it was prematurely decreed that men should cease making death-dealing weapons, have well-equipped armies met face to face as they do today.

Though all types of armament have been improved since 1918, it does not follow that any given nation has equipment so superior as to facilitate lightning war in which the enemy will be vanquished overnight.

You Can't Win.

To the contrary, the military inventions of one power have been so equally matched by neighboring states that the stalemate is increased. In modern warfare, sheer power runs against sheer power. Thus, on France's western front, neither army is able to gain a decided advantage. Knowing this, they stay safely behind well-guarded front lines.

If this frightful power were unleashed there would be only chaotic destruction of life to show in the end, advances would be negligible.

Such an ultimate clash of strength would provide the experts with their first clue to the potentialities of modern weapons. Italy's invasion of Ethiopia was no test, for Il Duce's army was pitted against an inferior foe So were Hitler's legions in Poland. The Spanish war found each side ill equipped and resorting to old-style guerilla tactics, as have the combatants in the Chinese-Japanese war.

Finland has demonstrated that shrewd maneuvering, coupled with aid from Mother Nature, can stop the Russian juggernaut. But what will happen next summer, when the mechanized Red army operates under normal conditions?

Bombers Shun the Civilians.

Military experts believe the end of war may come when nations realize how an attack may backfire. An indication that the powers appreciate this danger is demonstrated in the fact that not a single civilian objective was bombed in the first five months of the allied-German war. To bomb London, the Nazis know, would be to invite retaliatory bombing of Munich, Berlin and other cities.

Thus the vast improvement in death dealing weapons may be a blessing in disguise.

Take the ordinary rifle, traditionally the backbone of armed strength. In 1865 an American infantry soldier carried a long-barreled, single-shot, muzzle-loading musket that delivered an average of one cartridge a minute. Its maximum efficiency was 300 yards. By World war days the army was using a Springfield breech-loading, bolt-action, repeating rifle which the average soldier could discharge at a rate of 13 shots a minute. Its efficiency range was 600 yards.

It's Faster in 1940.

Today's Garand rifle requires but a pull of the trigger to discharge an eight-shot cartridge case, eject it and place a new load in the chamber. Though it can be fired up to 100 times per minute, its average efficiency is about 35. Maximum distance has been increased, but for battle purposes the range remains about 600 yards.

The first machine gun in 1865 was the Gatling, a military wonder which fired about 150 bullets of musket calibre a minute. Thanks to its stable mounting, the Gatling was efficient at 1,100 yards. By 1918 American troops had the Browning machine gun, water-cooled and gas-operated, which fired 500 rounds a minute at an effective range of 3,500 yards. By last year Browning ammunition had been so improved that the same gun could reach 5,500 or 6,000 yards.

Artillery on Wheels.

As with the machine gun, the United States army still depends on the old French "seventy-five" field artillery piece. Originally this gun had a standard base, was hard to move and offered a low maximum range. It fired only 9,000 yards. Today it is mounted on a pneumatic-tired carriage, has been given greater elevation to permit a 13,500-yard range and is easily moved from one sector to another.

Air and sea weapons have increased apace. In 1865 the average fighting ship displaced no more than 3,000 tons, the super-battleship of that day being Britain's H. M. S. Warrior. That boat displaced 9,000 tons and carried four dozen sixty-eight pounder smooth bore guns. By 1918 the giant was Britain's Queen Elizabeth, displacing 27,500 tons and mounting eight guns of the 15-inch size. She had 13-inch armor sides.

Today the British Nelson displaces 33,000 tons and has 16-inch guns—nine of them. She has 14-inch armor and travels at a speed of 30 knots compared with the Elizabeth's 25 knots.

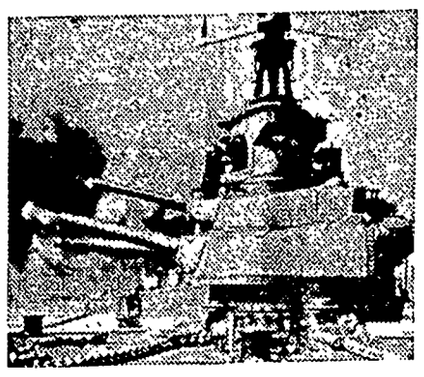
Warships are getting bigger every year. Thirty-five thousand ton boats will soon be ready and the United States government is already talking about 40,000 tonners.

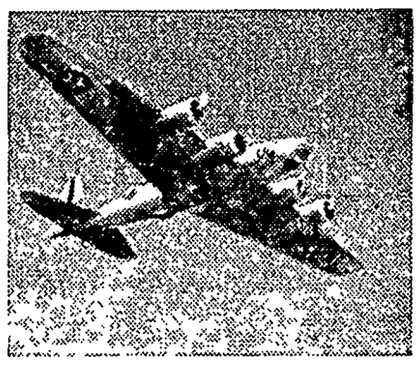
The airplane, an infant in the World war, has become a formidable weapon today. In 1918 the Martin bomber cruised 600 miles at an average speed of 118 miles per hour. Today a bomber like the Boeing can go 3,500 miles at 250 miles per hour. It carries 10,000 pounds of bombs and ammunition, compared with 1,500 pounds for the old Martin.

Might does not make right, as the world once believed, but it does make a war-hungry nation think twice before walking into the jaws of self-destruction.

BATTLESHIPS

Maximum speed has grown from 14 knots in 1865 to 30 knots today. Cruising range now 5,200 miles against 3,000 miles in 1865. Modern vessels mount 15-inch guns, compared with earlier artillery effective only a few hundred yards.



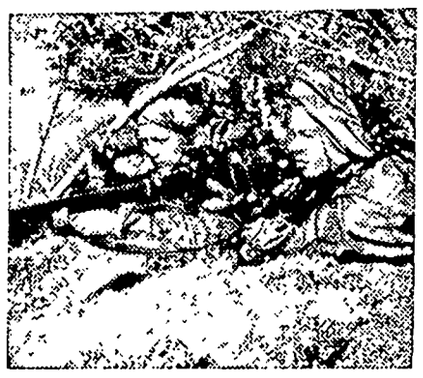


BOMBERS

Maximum speed has increased tremendously, cruising rate of 1940 bomber being 250 m.p.h. compared with 118 m.p.h. for 1918 makeshift bomber. Cruising range: 3,500 miles today against only 600 miles in World war.

RIFLE

Modern gun effective at 600 yards, shooting average of 36 shots per minute. This compares with 300-yard effective range in 1865, when infantrymen averaged two shots per minute. New gun discharges 20-shot clips in two and one-half seconds.

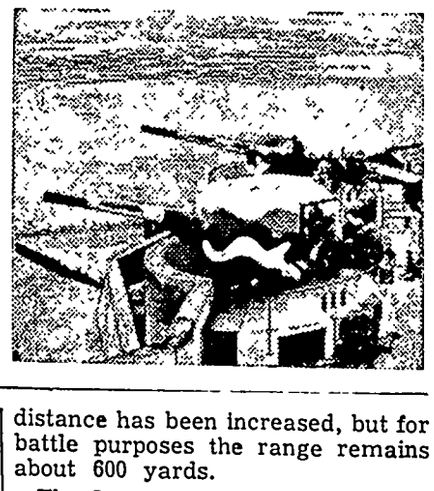


MACHINE GUN

Earliest was Civil war's Gatling gun, which could fire 150 shots a minute at 1,100-yard effective range. Browning gun, adopted in World war, now improved to fire 500 shots per minute at effective range of 1,200 yards. Same fire rate as in World war.

ARTILLERY

Civil war gun immobile and effective at no more than 1,100 yards. French "seventy-five" adopted in World war, still used but effectiveness increased from 9,000 to 13,500 yards with new mounting. Illustrated: Fixed-placement coastal artillery.



Dust Bowl on Rampage Again But Farmers Still Have Hope

OKLAHOMA CITY. — Light snows that broke the "dust bowl's" complete drouth in December and January won't change the picture of next year's crops, say experts who have watched this phenomenon change from year to year in the past decade.

The snows came too late to save spring wheat crops, and next year's dust bowl will probably be about twice the size it was last summer, department of agriculture officials predict. In some sections it is the greatest fall and winter drouth ever experienced, and the government's anti-drouth program is thus being given its supreme test.

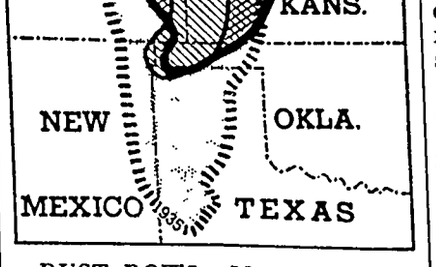
There'll be a lot of dry land next spring, but soil conservationists have promised the dust bowlers that they needn't expect a renewal of the horrible "black blizzards" that made life miserable in past years. Thanks to proper care, more land has a cover of grass or stubble, hence is less exposed to wind erosion.

Precipitation figures for late fall months show the unhappy prospects in several states. Parts of Kansas, whose southwest corner lies in the dust bowl's heart, received less than an inch of rain during September and October. This was the highest on record. All states in that vicinity suffered subnormal rainfall. Percentages included: Kansas, 19 per cent. Montana, 76; Nebraska, 30; North Dakota, 53; Minnesota, 50; Wyoming, 77, and Iowa, 37 per cent.

The tragic part of it is that winter wheat farmers, whose crops for next year are already blasted, must now wait until next fall to plant their next crop. Meanwhile there is no source of livelihood outside of government aid. Both live-stock raisers and wheat farmers are suffering, but the stockmen have a better chance in sections where feed crops were good despite grain crop failures last summer.

From its experiences in the dust bowl the government is learning important lessons about conservation. There's a definite change in the pattern of farming here. Contour methods have been developed to save the water and thus prevent soil erosion. In a 96,000,000-acre area normally considered as potentially a part of the wind erosion region, the soil conservation service has approximately 3,500,000 acres operating under a supervised program that is netting results.

Next year's bigger drouth may be a temporary setback, but farmers and conservationists alike are confident the problem can be licked.



DUST BOWL—Map shows how next year's drouth area will compare with last year's, and how each compares with the largest stricken area a few years ago.

Just Good Food

In her own town and in her time, Aunt Edith was considered a good cook. When prizes were awarded for the best cakes at church fairs, Aunt Edith won her share of them. But she had her bad days, too, when this pie crust was soggy or that cake fell flat Aunt Edith used to say, "Well, I had good luck with my baking today," and sometimes she said, "I don't know why, but my sponge cake isn't near as nice as usual, this time." Luck played quite a part in the success or failure of one's cooking and baking, in those days! There isn't any mystery about cooking and baking today, this "four-point plan" eliminates the element of chance, and insures uniform results, day after day: 1, tested recipes; 2, accurate measurements; 3, proper methods of mixing; 4, correct temperature for cooking and baking.

Reliable recipes and good ingredients are available by the score. When you've found the ones you like, stick to them! Marked measuring cups and spoons have done away with the old time "pinch" of this, and "smidgin" of that, and directions for mixing are a part of every tested recipe. Thermometers of every kind insure the proper temperature for cooking and baking; thermometers for deep fat frying eliminate grease-soaked doughnuts or croquettes; there'll be no sticky, runny frostings or candy that won't "set," when the cooking is done with candy thermometers; meat thermometers mean roasts that are cooked to just the right degree of "doneness", and oven thermometers are practically indispensable for the countless baking jobs involved in feeding a family. You'll find the recipes below meet the requirements of the four-point plan. You'll want to add them to your file of tested recipes for "Just Good Food."

Silver Cake.
(Makes 2 9-inch layers)

2¾ cups cake flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon almond extract
4 egg whites (stiffly beaten)

Sift together the flour, baking powder, and salt. Cream the butter, and add 1 cup of the sugar gradually, beating until smooth and fluffy. Add the dry ingredients to the creamed mixture, alternately with the milk. Add flavoring. Beat the egg whites until stiff but not dry, and gradually beat in the remaining ½ cup of sugar. Fold into the cake batter. Bake in 2 greased 9-inch layer cake pans in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for 25 to 30 minutes.

Boiled Icing.

2½ cups granulated sugar
½ cup light corn syrup
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup water
2 egg whites
1 teaspoon almond extract

Cook sugar, corn syrup, salt and water together to the firm ball stage (250 degrees). Pour the hot syrup slowly into the well-beaten egg whites, beating constantly. Add almond extract and continue beating until the frosting will hold its shape when tossed over the back of a spoon Should icing become too stiff to manipulate easily, a small amount of hot water may be added.

Lemon Apple Cake Filling.

Pare and grate one large, tart apple. (There should be 1 cup of grated pulp). Add 2 tablespoons of lemon rind grated, 1 cup sugar, 1 egg, beaten, and 1 tablespoon of quick-cooking tapioca. Cook over hot water until thick and clear—about 15 minutes. Cool, and spread generously between the layers of a cake. The filling is especially good in white cake.

Liver Croquettes.
(Makes 10-12 croquettes)

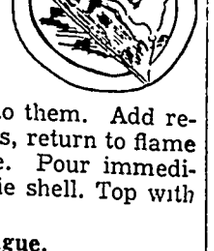
¾ pound beef liver
1 teaspoon baking powder
Boiling water
2 tablespoons onion (grated)
1 cup fine bread crumbs (moistened with 2 tablespoons water)
½ cup thick white sauce
2 eggs (well beaten)
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Cover liver with boiling water to which baking powder has been added. Cook a few minutes until liver begins to get tender. Remove from water, cut off tough skin or connective tissue, then grind. Mix with bread crumbs, white sauce, and eggs well beaten. Season to taste and cool. Shape into small ball croquettes. Fry in deep fat (375 degrees) until golden brown. Drain on unglazed paper. Serve at once with hot tomato sauce. If desired, croquettes may be dipped in crumbs, egg, then crumbs again before deep frying.

Lemon Meringue Pie.

1 cup sugar
¼ cup cornstarch
¼ teaspoon salt
⅔ cup cold water
⅔ cup boiling water
3 egg yolks
1 tablespoon butter
¼ cup lemon juice
1 teaspoon lemon rind (grated)

Combine sugar, cornstarch and salt. Add cold water; stir until smooth. Add boiling water and cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is clear and thick. Cook 3 minutes longer. Beat egg yolks; stir cooked mixture into them. Add remaining ingredients, return to flame and cook 1 minute. Pour immediately into baked pie shell. Top with meringue.



Meringue.

3 egg whites
6 tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt

Beat egg whites partially; then add sugar slowly, beating until mixture is stiff. Bake in slow oven (300 degrees) for 18 minutes.

Apple Sauce Doughnuts.

2 tablespoons shortening
1½ cups brown sugar
2 eggs (beaten)
1 cup apple sauce
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
3¼ cups bread flour
4 teaspoons baking powder

Cream shortening and add sugar; blend thoroughly. Add the eggs. Combine apple sauce, salt, soda, and spices, and add to first mixture. Sift together the flour and baking powder, and add. Roll out to ¼-inch thickness on well-floured board. Cut in circles and fry in deep fat (365 degrees) until brown. Drain and roll in confectioners' sugar.

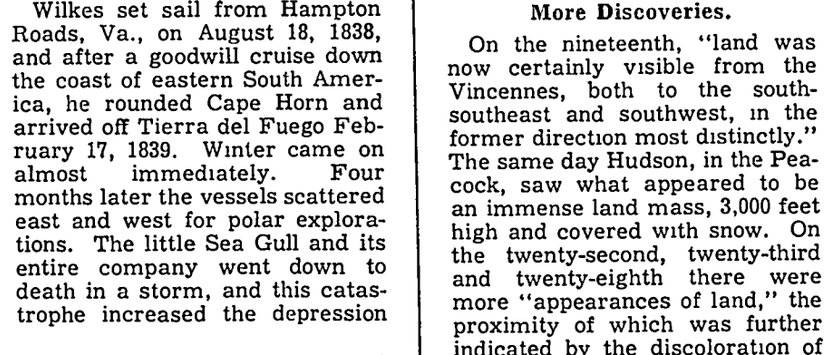
Wilkes' Discovery of New Continent One Hundred Years Ago Gave America Its First Claim to Antarctic Lands

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

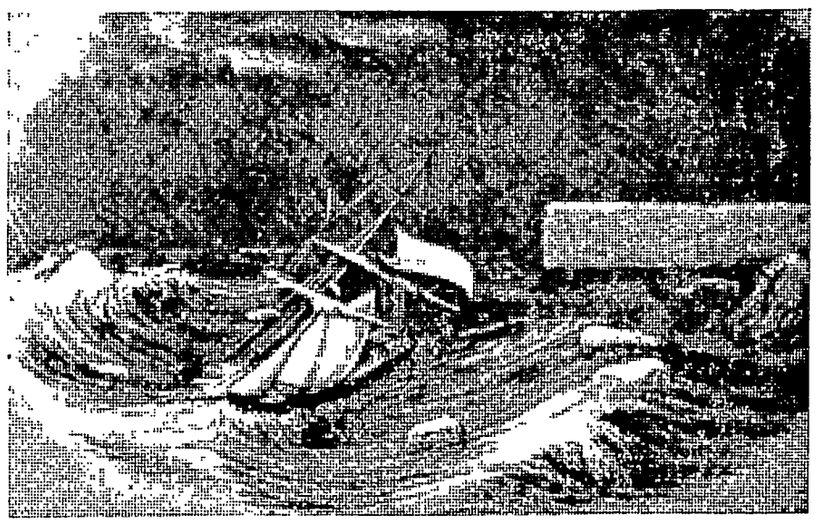
THE recent departure of Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd for his third expedition into the Antarctic, an expedition which has three purposes—exploration, scientific investigation and, most important of all, strengthening any future claims of the United States on territory in the region of the South Pole—recalls another intrepid American explorer who gave us our first claim to that country just 100 years ago. He was Lieut. Charles N. Wilkes of the United States navy, who, on January 16, 1840, was the first to discover the existence of a continent in the Antarctic sea.

As has been the case in so many parts of the world, Great Britain was the first nation to assert sovereignty over Antarctica. Her claims go back to January 17, 1773, when Capt. James Cook crossed the Antarctic circle for the first time in history. A year later he reached what was then "farthest south" (even though it was 1,318 miles from the South pole!) and discovered a land which he named the Isle of Georgia, in honor of George III, and Sandwich land, in honor of the fourth earl of Sandwich, first lord of the admiralty during the American Revolution.

In 1823 James Weddell of the British royal navy discovered the sea which now bears his name and set a new "farthest south" record or 1,102 miles from the pole. Soon after that the famous whaling firm of Enderby in London became interested in Antarctic exploration and sent out several expeditions. In one of them in 1830 James Briscoe of the British navy discovered and named Kemp land, and in 1839 John Balleny discovered and named the Balleny islands.



The Vincennes in Disappointment bay—From an illustration in Wilkes "Narratives."



The Porpoise in an Antarctic gale—From an illustration in Wilkes "Narratives."

To Aid Whalers.

By this time the United States had become interested in South polar exploration also, and in 1836 congress authorized an expedition which was intended primarily to assist American whaling industries in competing with the British by recharting and routing the South Pacific islands, locating islands, whaling areas and industrial prospects. Antarctic exploration was a secondary purpose.

For this reason the expedition was not fitted out with vessels especially selected to buck ice packs or withstand polar winters; they were ordinary naval vessels of thin walls, weak prows and exposed rudders. The two larger vessels, the Vincennes and the Peacock, had the added disadvantage of a superimposed gun deck and exposed open gun ports in the lower deck. There was poor and inadequate stowage space for food and medical supplies and water and a very small supply of fuel If Lieut. Charles N. Wilkes of the United States navy, commander of the expedition, had been ice-trapped and forced to winter within the Antarctic circle, he and his entire party would have been frozen or starved to death. The five ships that made the cruise, the sloops Vincennes and Peacock, the storeship Relief, the brig Porpoise and the tenders Sea Gull and Flying Fish, totaled less than 2,000 tons, and yet carried a crew of 440 men. This meant cramped quarters, with foul air and lack of space for isolation in case of sickness. Also, the authorities had failed to stock the squadron with anti-scorbutics to prevent scurvy.

Wilkes Has Troubles.

Further to add to the difficulties, Wilkes began to show condescension and almost open contempt to the group of civilian scientists that had been assigned him. Among them was Titian Peale, artist and naturalist, the third of the famous Maryland artist family. Friction and jealousy sprang up among the officers of the command. The commander of the Peacock was senior to Wilkes in the navy, thus requiring a delicacy and tact almost impossible during the cruise and always galling for so downright and headstrong a man as Wilkes. The crew was insubordinate, and there were 125 desertions during the cruise.

Wilkes set sail from Hampton Roads, Va., on August 18, 1838, and after a goodwill cruise down the coast of eastern South America, he rounded Cape Horn and arrived off Tierra del Fuego February 17, 1839. Winter came on almost immediately. Four months later the vessels scattered east and west for polar explorations. The little Sea Gull and its entire company went down to death in a storm, and this catastrophe increased the depression of the captain and the fear and discontent of his crew. From May to November the squadron made a great sweep across the South Pacific to Australia.

On December 26 Wilkes led his squadron of four vessels, the Vincennes, which he commanded himself; the Peacock, commanded by Capt. William L. Hudson; the brig Porpoise, commanded by Lieut. Commander Cadwalader Ringgold; and the tender, Flying Fish, out of Sydney harbor and headed for Macquarie island, the first rendezvous. Within a week after leaving Sydney the Flying Fish and the Peacock dropped out of sight in the fog. Then the Porpoise disappeared but Wilkes pushed on southward in the Vincennes.

Finds a New Continent.

By January 16, 1840, he had reached 66 degrees south latitude and had found the Peacock and the Porpoise. They were now confronted by an ice barrier, but the crews of the remaining ships reported that appearances beyond the barrier seemed to indicate land, and in his report Wilkes sets January 16, 1840, as the date of the discovery of a new continent

Concerning this Wilkes writes in his five-volume narrative of the expedition that "appearances believed to be land were visible from all three vessels, and the comparison of the three observations, when taken in connection with the more positive proofs of its existence afterward obtained, has left no doubt that the appearance was not deceptive. From this day, therefore, we date the discovery which is claimed for the squadron." From the Peacock the mountains could be distinctly seen "stretching to the southwest as far as anything could be discerned."

More Discoveries.

On the nineteenth, "land was now certainly visible from the Vincennes, both to the south-southeast and southwest, in the former direction most distinctly." The same day Hudson, in the Peacock, saw what appeared to be an immense land mass, 3,000 feet high and covered with snow. On the twenty-second, twenty-third and twenty-eighth there were more "appearances of land," the proximity of which was further indicated by the discoloration of the water and the character of the bottom shown by soundings.

On the thirtieth the Vincennes entered an indentation of the ice-bound coast, which was named Piner's bay. "We approached," says Wilkes, "within half a mile of the dark volcanic rocks, which appeared on both sides of us, and saw the land gradually rising beyond the ice to the height of 3,000 feet. It could be distinctly seen extending to the east and west of our position fully 60 miles. Now that all were convinced of its existence, I gave the land the name of the Antarctic continent."

On February 13 the record notes: "Land distinctly seen from 18 to 20 miles distant, a lofty mountain range covered with snow." The following day land was again seen. On the fourteenth: "By measurement the extent of coast of the Antarctic continent, which was then in sight, 75 miles and 3,000 feet high."

Land Named for Him.

Wilkes turned north when in about 97 degrees 40 minutes east, 64 degrees 1 minute south, after having skirted the Antarctic coast for fully 1,700 miles. What he had actually discovered was the large segment of Antarctica afterward named Wilkes land in his honor.

On March 11, 1840, Wilkes arrived at Sydney and wrote to the secretary of the navy: "It affords me much gratification to report that we have discovered a large body of land within the Antarctic circle, which I have named the Antarctic continent, and refer you to the report of our cruise and accompanying charts, enclosed herewith, for full information relative thereto." On March 13 the Sydney Herald published a long account of the expedition, in which appeared the first printed notice of the fact that a continent had been discovered in the Antarctic. Before the end of the year a similar announcement was published in London

Wilkes' expedition, made in unseaworthy sailing ships which lacked the special equipment usually regarded as indispensable by polar explorers, was a daring and splendid venture. Some of the positions he assigned to the coast have since been proved to be inaccurate and some of his "appearances of land" were probably ice, but the fact is undeniable that he found a vast stretch of Antarctic coast where no land of any kind was previously supposed to exist, and that the knowledge we possess today concerning the outlines of the Antarctic continent began to take definite shape with his discoveries. But, most important of all, those discoveries gave the United States a real basis for its claims in Antarctica and some day if we wish to establish airplane bases there that may be a very important fact indeed

Wilkes, our first Antarctic explorer, was a native of New York city, having been born there April 3, 1798. It is an interesting fact that his name is better known to most Americans in connection with an incident which occurred two decades later than it is for his polar discoveries. That incident was the famous "Trent affair" of 1861.

In 1855 Wilkes was commissioned captain and at the outbreak of the Civil war in 1861 he was placed in command of the sloop, San Jacinto. On November 8 the San Jacinto encountered the English mail steamer, Trent, which was on its way from Havana to St. Thomas in the West Indies. Aboard the steamer on this voyage were John Slidell of Louisiana and James M. Mason of Virginia, who had been appointed commissioners to enlist the sympathy and aid of France and Great Britain for the Confederate cause.

The San Jacinto easily overtook the Trent, which hoisted the English colors while Wilkes ran up the Stars and Stripes and fired a shot across the Trent's bow as a signal for her to stop. When the British captain paid no attention to this summons the San Jacinto sent a shell screaming across the water in front of her. Then the Briton hove to.

Wilkes ordered Lieutenant Fairfax to man two boats and board the Trent. When the lieutenant did so and asked permission of the captain to see his passenger list, the request was refused. However, Fairfax, seeing Mason and Slidell, and their secretaries, Messrs Eustis and McFarlane, on the deck informed them that he had orders to take them aboard the San Jacinto. Over the vigorous protest of the British captain this was done, although the families of the four Confederates were allowed to remain on the Trent which continued on its way to England.

Hero of the Hour.

Captain Wilkes took his prisoners to Boston where they were imprisoned in Fort Warren. Their capture created a sensation throughout the country and for a time Wilkes was the hero of the hour. His act was indorsed by the secretary of the navy who wrote the captain a letter of thanks and he received a similar letter from congress. Banquets and receptions were given him in Boston, New York and Washington.

But over in England the affair was viewed in a very different light. The British government made a peremptory demand upon the government of the United States for the restoration of the prisoners and an official apology for Wilkes' insult to the British flag and his violation of international law. For a time it seemed that the United States and England might be embroiled in a war over the incident, for popular feeling in this country was running as high as it was across the Atlantic.

Fortunately, however, President Lincoln and his secretary of State, William H. Seward, were unswayed by public opinion. They ordered the prisoners surrendered on the ground that Captain Wilkes had erred in not carrying the Trent to a neutral port to have the case adjudicated before a prize court. In acting as the judge himself and practically executing his own decree the captain had technically committed a violation of international law for which the only redress was the restoration of the status quo

Several years later the Royal Geographical society of England presented him with a gold medal in recognition of his work as an explorer. It was also striking evidence of the fact that the English people bore him no ill-will because of his action in the Trent affair. He died in Washington on February 8 1877

Strange Facts

Smell the Danger Clear Way for Shah Humble Hug Walls

In many large Western mines where alarm bells cannot be heard over the noise of the machinery, the workers are warned of a fire by an odor produced by a few drops of butyl mercaptan put into the air-circulating system. This danger signal has the odor of skunk.

The Better Way to Correct Constipation

One way to treat constipation is to endure it first and "cure" it afterward. The other way is to avoid having it by getting at its cause. So why not save yourself those dull headachy days, plus the inevitable trips to the medicine chest, if you can do it by a simple common-sense "ounce of prevention"?

If your trouble, like that of millions, is due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, "the better way" is to eat Kellogg's All-Bran. This crunchy, toasted, ready-to-eat cereal has just the "bulk" you need. If you eat it regularly—and drink plenty of water—you can not only get regular but keep regular, day after day and month after month! All-Bran is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

"Day-Time Wife" Starring Tyrone Power And Darnell At The Avery Theatre

Gay comedy and romantic revelry are the keynote of "Day-Time Wife", coming Sun., Mon., and Tues, Jan. 28, 29, 30, at the Avery Theatre with Tyrone Power and Linda Darnell co-starred. The film presents Tyrone in the light, carefree role in which he excels and the selection of dark-eyed and lovely Linda to play opposite him is a genuine sensation. It marks her second screen appearance but her performance in her debut in "Hotel For Women" well justifies the choice The story tells of the hilariously romantic carryings-on of a husband who goes whistling under the wrong balcony (his secretary's) and a perfect peach of a wife who rests on the oars (but not for long). Featured in the cast are Warren Williams, Binnie Barnes, Wendy Barrie and Joan Davis.

William Tyndale Is Called Father of English Bible

William Tyndale has been called "The Father of the English Bible." It was he who first printed parts of the Bible in English and sent them broadcast through the land There was a law forbidding anyone to translate the Scriptures into English without authority, and when Tyndale applied to the bishop of London for permission he was refused. To him the translator made his famous declaration: "If God spare my life, I will cause a boy that driveth a plow to know more of the Scripture than thou dost."

While at Cambridge, Tyndale had been under the influence of Erasmus, the greatest Greek scholar of his day, and it was there that he made himself familiar with the Greek testament. He was determined that the people of England should have the advantage of reading for themselves the Word of God through the new invention of printing, and, when he found that this could not be accomplished at home, he left for the continent. That was in 1524. In Hamburg he worked in much the same way as Jerome had done nearly a century before and a year after he was at Cologne with the sheets of his quarto New Testament ready for the printer.

One day a message came that he was being watched, so with his precious sheets he escaped to Worms. It was there that he succeeded in publishing the first edition of the New Testament in English. The volumes were taken secretly into his own country hidden in cases, in barrels, in bales of cloth, and wherever they could be stowed away and before long they were in many homes throughout the land. To make the shipping of them easier Tyndale also printed an edition in a smaller size.

Thousands of copies were seized and burnt, but when the translator heard of this his comment was: "In burning the book they did none other than I looked for; no more shall they do if they burn me also, if it be God's will that it should be done." Tyndale also translated parts of the Old Testament, but for his efforts he was thrown into prison. His last prayer was—"Lord, open the king of England's eyes." He was eventually strangled and his body burnt at the stake. All this was done in the name of religion.

LAW REQUIRES CORRECT LABELING OF ALL SEEDS

The Iowa Agricultural Seed Law requires all agricultural seed to be correctly labeled, stated Mark G. Thornburg, Iowa Secretary of Agriculture, last week as he addressed the convention of the Iowa Farmers Grain Dealers' Association in Des Moines.

Variety of seed; the approximate percentage of weight of the purity of the seed; the approximate total percentage, by weight of weed seed; the name of each kind of seed or bublet of noxious weeds present; and the approximate percentage of germination of such agricultural seed.

The Klemme Shamrocks outscored the Belmond Broncos in the last half of their battle here Tuesday night but failed to overcome an eight-point advantage the visitors built up in the first half and were defeated 22 to 17 A 10 to 2 lead, which Belmond gained in the first quarter. was really the margin of victory After that, the teams played on virtually equal terms At one time during the last quarter, the Shamrocks pulled up to within three points of a tie but missed to many shots to get any closer

Loats, Belmond's southpaw center, led his team's scoring with twelve points, while Barz dropped in four field goals for a high Klemme total of eight points

In the second team game, Belmond also held an early lead throughout the contest to win by a score of 16 to 8 Jacobs led the local scoring in this game with three points

VAGABONDS TRIM WILLIAMS 48 TO 32

The Vagabonds added another victory to their credit Monday night, when they defeated Williams, 48 to 32, on the local floor

The game was fairly close all the way through until in the last part of the third quarter, when Klemme started clicking and from there on stayed out in front

The second team also came through with a victory, when they won their game 27 to 19.

The playing of both games, and both teams, was a little ragged It was sort of a "hit and miss" proposition, but both of Klemme's teams hit often enough to win their games

Home Games

On Feb 5th, the Vagabonds meet Rockford and on Feb. 12, the Aztecs Both of these teams should offer good opposition and so keep these dates in mind, as both games should be well worth your time. Both are Double-Headers!

Lois Gast was the groom, Hilda Abele the bride, Lola Gast the ring bearer and Ruth Ridder the preacher

Mrs Charles Ax and Marv Lange sang a song which was composed by Mrs. Charles Ax, which is as follows:

It was just thirty years ago
That Meta Bredlow had a beau
But she said I want a man
And I'll do the best I can

So she said Herman dear,
This is what we call Leap Year,
And you must not say no
Because you are my beau

Herman was so timid then
Just like all the other men
Meta said You will be
Just the darling man for me

Herman said, "you are the best
And I never will be cross."
Meta said, "Oh how devine
Is that darling man of mine"

And now all the years gone by
And Herman is still a good guy
Meta is a darling dear
Even if it was Leap Year.

And new it's Leap Year again,
So much luck for all you men
Think of Herman when you say,
I will be your's and right away

Then Mr. Beier gave a short talk and presented Mr. and Mrs Gast with a purse of money, after which refreshments were served

Brain Found to Control Three Phases of Energy

The all embracing law of energy is that it runs in cycles, declares Joseph Jastrow in his article, "The Story of Human Energies" appearing in a recent issue of Hygeia

Life is a series of rhythms. The energy cycle presents the three phases of energizing, fatigue, and rest. In the core of the brain is a mechanism that sets your pro... from the cradle to the grave ... in and day out, with allow... for emergencies and holidays, that portion of the brain has served you as a monitor of the energy cycle

Conditioning the energy cycle is a chemical traffic system called metabolism. The feelings of energy and fatigue set up the go, caution and stop signs. The body needs more than rest to keep it going; it also needs food. Stoking goes on to supply nourishment; food is metabolized into energy.

It is true that muscles tire and that nerve fibers do not, any more than do the wires of an electric circuit over which the current runs. But it is still truer that the entire neuromuscular set-up is the focus of fatigue; the nerve battery runs down.

Winter Vacation Comes Into Its Own As U. S. Succumbs to 'January Blues'

By ARNOLD PETERS
(Released by Western Newspaper Union)

CHICAGO.—This is the season when northerners—from city and village alike—look glumly at gray skies and old snow. It's the time when a few southerners grow weary of winter weather that is just a repetition of summer.

There's only one explanation: It's January.

With the rest of the world at war, America's own folks are discovering its diverse vacation opportunities for the first time this winter. Hot, cold or dry—what'll you have? The United States boasts all of them!

And there's only one sure cure: A winter vacation!

Three strange and unrelated developments have placed American sand, sea and snow in the limelight this year. It's the biggest winter vacation year we've ever seen, and that applies to the entire nation.

First there's the war. Wealthy vacationists who once wintered on the Riviera and points east are staying home this year. For the first time they've discovered that to "see America first" is really a practical idea.

Two Weeks Off—With Pay.

Second, the winter vacation is no longer a rich man's luxury. Overnight John Public has discovered (if he's an office worker) that he can take his two weeks off in January as well as June, and with no extra expense. If he's a northern farmer with just a few miscellaneous chores around the homestead, he'll find it almost as economical to head south for the winter. The vacation spots are catering these days to plain folks like you and me, who haven't a lot of money to spend.

Third, there's a refreshing new interest in outdoor sports. Fishing, horseback riding, swimming, skating, skiing—all the thrills of a winter or summer vacation are accessible in January if you'll look for them.

Outdoor Sports Boom.

It isn't many years since we holed in for northern winters and envied the southbound birds. Nowadays the winter resorts do a thriving trade all the way from New Hampshire's hills to Oregon's famed Timberline lodge on Mount Hood. The swish of skiis vies with the ring of a skater's heel on crisply cold landscapes whose silence is broken only by the shouts of happy sportsmen.

A great life, this, with its moonlight picnics and sleighrides, its glowing cheeks and cheery firesides. Great for some folks—but not for the indolent. They'll take Florida in the winter, where a fellow can just lie on a sun-baked beach and forget.

Miami and other resort spots, both on the east and west coasts of Florida, report the biggest year in a decade. You can get what you want here: Millionaires, flowers and glamour on the east; shells, strands, oysters and mangrove trees on stilts in the west. Or try the gulf coast, just south of Dixie, which is a winter paradise in itself.

The Desert Is Bracing.

Only in the past five years has the southwest vacationland come into its own. Here, by contrast with the northland's exhilarating cold and the southland's soothing warmth, the visitor finds a bracing quality in the rare and dry desert air. It all depends on what you want.

Like the North, the Southwest is a country of vastness, only it's a different kind. Deserts that run on for miles suddenly break into weird and colorful mountain scenery. Nature, not bountiful here, has left instead the stimulant she forgot to leave elsewhere.

The Southwest is not expensive for your winter vacation. It's a country of dude ranches and horseback riding, where natives lead the same kind of saddle life as the visitors. All you need is blue jeans, a colored shirt and maybe a 10-gallon hat. Indian pueblos, missions and sun-baked houses give this ancient land a Latin-American air that is almost like a trip to old Mexico.

Cowboys Join the Dudes.

Fiestas, Indian tribal ceremonies and rodeos are the big tourist attractions. Until rodeo day, dude ranchers besport themselves on the same level as the quiet cowboys from the range. But when you see a cowhand rope and tie a calf in 22 seconds flat you know there's still a lot to be learned.

For the vacationist who wants all three—sand, snow and sun—California remains the No. 1 winter tourist mecca. As usual, the current season is drawing thousands of visitors to resort centers ranging from the Pacific beaches to desert-dry places like Death valley. In between, California offers the highly accessible snow slopes of Yosemite park, just a few hours from tropical sunshine.

Better pack up your bags and get going. It's winter vacation time and Dame Nature won't be kept waiting!

Billings Follows Trade He Learned in Prison

SAN FRANCISCO. — A few blocks along Market street from the scene of the 1916 Preparedness day bombing which sent him to prison, Warren K. Billings repairs watches today.

He recently opened a tiny watchmaking shop to practice the trade he learned while serving 23 years in prison for the explosion which killed 10 persons and injured many.

Billings' life sentence was commuted by Gov. Culbert L. Olson. Tom Mooney had been pardoned nine months before.

With the first business he has ever owned Billings, 46 years old, hopes to support a home. He will marry Miss Josephine Rudolph of San Mateo.

Television May Help Generals Fight the War of Tomorrow

NEW YORK. — Television looms as a potent force in the high-geared war of the future, though World War II has come too early in television's development for any immediate use.

For the past few years military experts have been scrutinizing television and its adaptation for war purposes. It may become vitally important in eliminating the time lag in scouting and reconnaissance activities.

At present, aviation and aerial photography have speeded up reconnaissance to a tremendous degree. The most important thing for an army's general staff to know in war is what the enemy is doing, where it is located and in what troop dispositions. The airplane and camera provide the fastest possible means of transmitting this information, but it still takes time—too much time for "lightning war."

Television will make such information immediate. General staff will see enemy locations and movements picked up and transmitted from a reconnaissance plane, as they are at the moment and will be able to act without delay. There will be no waiting for developing and printing of aerial photographs, during which the situation might change, and there wouldn't be, harsh as it may seem, the absolute dependence on the reconnaissance plane returning.

To determine when and how television can best be used for military purposes, army chiefs are intensely interested in the status of television today.

What is that status?

According to engineers in the laboratories of Philco Radio & Television corporation, leaders in television development, general use of television is some years away.

"This is an age of miracles," was their consensus, "but not of overnight miracles. There must be time for orderly and sound development in television. Philco's television research engineers, for instance, have worked out many basic advances in the past 13 years and feel there are as many more fundamental improvements yet to be made, though they can not be accomplished at a faster pace.

"After all, the automotive industry took 20 years to attain a high degree of efficiency and widespread usage. Although radio broadcasting was first accomplished as early as 1906 it was many years before it reached the network stage. There has been a long interval of years between the first flight of the Wright brothers at Kitty Hawk and the regular transcontinental and transoceanic passenger flights of today."

Slow and inefficient aerial photography in wartime may give way to television—and it won't make much difference if the reconnaissance plane is brought down behind enemy lines.

According to these Philco engineers, "television can become the most important means of communication the world has ever known." Television receivers have already reached a comparatively high stage of efficiency, but there are several important scientific obstacles to be hurdled and goals to be achieved. A new technique for production of television programs must be found; many sources of interference, such as diathermy machines and automobiles without suppressors, must be corrected.

Then there is the problem of spanning distance. Television waves are now known to travel beyond the horizon but science has yet to find an effective control over waves at such a distance. Curvature of the earth obstructs further vision.

LAYING FLOCKS REQUIRE WATER

Warm Supply Is Necessary During Colder Months.

By C. F. PARRISH

Farmers and other interested persons—prepare for somewhat of a shock: About 66 per cent of an egg is water! That doesn't mean that eggs are not one of the best foods, but it does mean that the kind and amount of water a hen drinks is highly important.

For this reason the extension division of the North Carolina State college recommends the warming of drinking water for the laying flock during the winter and early spring months. It is well to remember that egg production will be greatly reduced and Old Man Winter will dip heavily into your egg profits if you permit drinking fountains to freeze over, or the water to become so cold the birds refuse to drink liberally.

There are a number of heated fountains on the market that will operate for about a week on a quart of kerosene. However, he said that a homemade device may be utilized if care is taken to make it fireproof. The only materials needed to make it are an old tin tub, sand, a few rough boards, and a kerosene lamp.

The tub is inverted on a bed of sand spread one inch deep over the area to be occupied by the device. Holes are made in the side of the tub to permit the escape of fumes and the entrance of oxygen. A platform is built over the tub and the container of water placed on the platform. The lighted lamp is put under the tub.

Flock owners are urged to protect the hens against cold, wind and snow by covering the cracks in the ends and sides of the laying house with strips of wood or heavy paper. A six-inch dry-litter on the floor makes the house more comfortable for the layers. Workable curtains on frames that move up and down in a track over the front of the laying house is also to be commended. These curtains should be held out about two inches from the wire front by the track so that they will not interfere with the ventilation.

'Strip Cropping' Rotation Keeps Moisture in Soil

Strip cropping combined with crop rotation adds up to "strip rotation," a method of saving soil and saving moisture that works well in many farming areas. The soil conservation service gives actual comparisons as worked out on experimental plots at the Pennsylvania State college farm in an area where erosion and gullying are not nearly so serious as in many farm regions.

In corn plots cultivated up and down hill for three years there was an annual soil loss averaging 43 tons to the acre yearly. By running the corn rows across the slope the loss was cut in half. In both cases three crops of corn in succession reduced fertility.

By strip rotation in the plots—planting corn rows across the slope and further breaking the slope with cross strips of close-growing hay crops to catch and strain out the soil that starts from the cultivated strips—the soil loss was cut to one twenty-fifth, a ton and a half a year instead of 43 tons. The water loss was only about one-fourth that from the all-corn plots. When the strips were plowed in as a part of the rotation, the roots and tops helped to restore organic matter and maintain fertility.

Clipping Dairy Cows

Probably the most important factor in keeping cows clean is clipping the hair short. Manure and other sources of bacteria naturally cling to long hair. A clipped cow is obviously much more easily and quickly cleaned. Clip the long hairs from the udders, flanks and tail in order that dirt may not cling to them. One hair, if it falls into the milk, may add as many as 30,000 bacteria. Because much of this dirt is soluble and dissolves in the milk, it cannot be strained out.

Student Pilots Need Thorough Health Check

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

IN THESE days when the world is becoming more air-minded and a continent or an ocean can be spanned in about half a day, more and more of our boys and young men are considering aviation as a career. They feel that the professions are crowded and that aviation offers an excellent opportunity for fame and fortune.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

During the last war I examined many recruits for the air service, an examination that differed to some extent from that of the other branches of the service as to eyesight, hearing, sense of balance and condition of heart and lungs. Today the physician examining recruits for the air service or commercial service gives an even more searching examination.

Dr. Samuel E. Brown, M. C., in Rocky Mountain Medical Journal, says:

"In examining an aviation candidate a complete history should be obtained. Regardless of physical findings a history of the following should be considered as disqualifications for flying training.

"1. Encephalitis letharica— sleeping sickness—or any illness accompanied by diplobia (seeing double) and sleepiness because of the chances of the return of the symptoms.

"2. Syphilis, due to the possibility of latent or late effects.

"3. Repeated attacks of asthma or hay fever.

"4. Recent attacks of malaria, on account of lower resistance, the uncertainty of a cure, and the sudden and extreme changes in temperature encountered in flying.

"5. Organic heart disease.

"6. Recurrent (occurring from time to time) attacks of any form of rheumatism, due to its likelihood of heart complications.

"7. Paroxysmal tacchycardia (attacks of very rapid beating of the heart) owing to the probability of having an attack while flying.

"8. Stone in the kidney.

"9. A history of an operation on the mastoid bone behind the ear, or a definite history of chronic inflammation of the middle ear, unless there have been no symptoms for a period of six months."

The fact that the boy or young adult has a history of any of the above conditions does not mean that he should give up the idea of trying to fly; some of the above conditions can be corrected by regular and persistent treatment. There are some of the above conditions which cannot be corrected sufficiently to permit flying but in which treatment can be of considerable benefit.

Apoplexy Patient Must Live Normally

ONE of the difficult situations for the patient, his family, and his physician is when a patient regains consciousness after his first stroke of apoplexy. This is understandable because the patient, family and physician all have the same question in mind, "Will there be another stroke and when will it occur?"

A second stroke may never occur and yet it may occur within a few days, or not perhaps for years.

What should be the attitude of all concerned after a stroke occurs?

While no one should close his eyes and thoughts entirely to the possibility of another stroke, the best way to prevent another stroke or delay it as long as possible is not to allow the patient to consider himself an invalid or a very sick individual. When it is considered safe for him to be up and around he should get back into his regular routine of life gradually but rapidly, so that the "fear" of another stroke will not get so many chances to occupy his mind.

Anxiety Begets Fear.

Dr. O. C. Perkins in New York State Journal of Medicine, says:

"When the patient regains consciousness and realizes that he has had a "stroke," anxiety begets fears and there is the element of worry to treat. These patients should not be kept in bed too long. The physician should take the patient into his confidence and explain what has happened."

A tiny blood vessel is broken. Rest will heal it, and that rest of mind and body, and eating small meals will prevent a rise in blood pressure and so prevent a stroke. He should be told that the improvement is likely to be rapid for three or four weeks, but may then progress slowly for a number of months. This will prevent him expecting too much in a short time.

'Noname,' Author of Famed Nickel Novels, Is Dead

Denis P. Senarens Was the Creator of Fabulous Frank Reade Jr.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

RECENTLY the newspapers throughout the country printed a brief press association dispatch which said:

NEW YORK.—Luis P. Senarens, seventy-six years old, often called the "American Jules Verne," who wrote 1,500 dime novels under 27 pseudonyms between 1876 and 1910, died from heart trouble yesterday in Kings county hospital. Senarens, who began his extraordinary career at the age of fourteen, created the fabulous Frank Reade and forecast in fiction many modern mechanical developments.

Son of an immigrant Cuban tobacco merchant, Senarens got his inspiration as a boy from visiting the Philadelphia Centennial exposition in 1876. At sixteen he was earning $200 a week and at thirty he became president of the Frank Tousey Publication company, which published all his works.

Thus was revealed, for the first time perhaps, to thousands of Americans the identity of one of their favorite authors back in the days of their youth when they tasted of forbidden fruit be revelling in the adventures of Fred Fearnot, Young Wild West, Old King Brady and especially Frank Reade Jr. For this brief obituary item unmasks, at last, the mysterious, tantalizing "Noname" whose imagination conjured up for the use of the ingenious Frank a host of mechanical marvels which seemed weirdly improbable then but are commonplace enough today.

We are greatly impressed when modern science and inventive skill produces a "mechanical man" who can speak and give the correct answer to problems propounded to him when the right buttons are pressed. But back in 1890 Frank Reade Jr. had an electrical man" who could do most of those things. If Henry Ford and the other motor car makers had read more of "Noname's" nickel novels, the course of automobile design might have been far different. For Frank Reade Jr. had a horse made of steel with jointed legs, driven by a steam engine inside. This animal was attached to a solid-tired vehicle in the same location where the automakers attached an engine covered with a "hood" of steel.

Four years later Frank Reade was staging a race around the world for a purse of $10,000. He was piloting his flying boat, which is amazingly like a modern autogiro, and his opponent in the race was Jack Wright, diving through the seas in his submarine which had a neat, glass-enclosed conning tower. In fact, Frank was a most versatile designer of flying machines. His "Monitor of the Air" was a cigar-shaped balloon that resembled a modern Zeppelin. Suspended below it by slings was the hull of a ship, complete with a rudder at the stern and a searchlight at the bow. Thus it was a combined ship of the air and ship of the sea, or in other words a sort of forecast of our modern seaplanes.

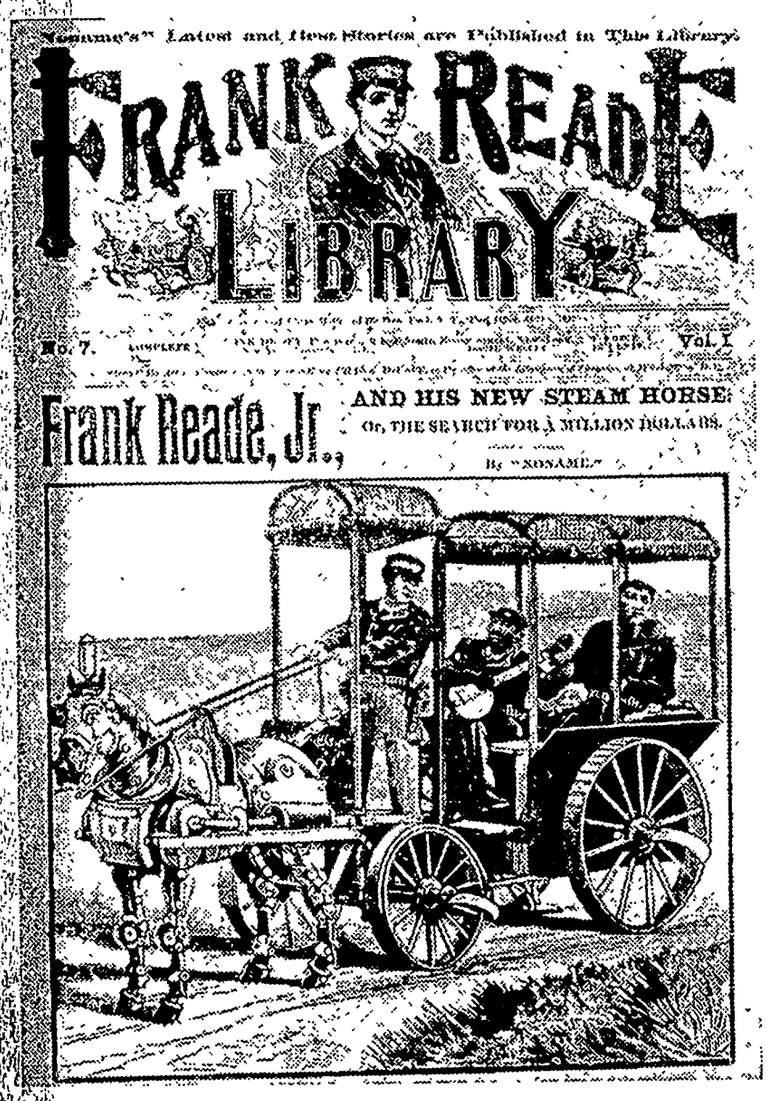
By the next year, 1895, Frank had had another idea for air travel. "Noname" called it "Frank Reade Jr.'s Greatest Flying Machine" in which he set out for a bit of "Fighting the Terror of the Coast." The picture on the front cover of this nickel thriller shows a large biplane, driven by two propellers, below which is suspended a land-boat with a hull similar to that on the "Monitor of the Air" but equipped with four wheels on which it could "taxi" along the ground in landing or taking off.

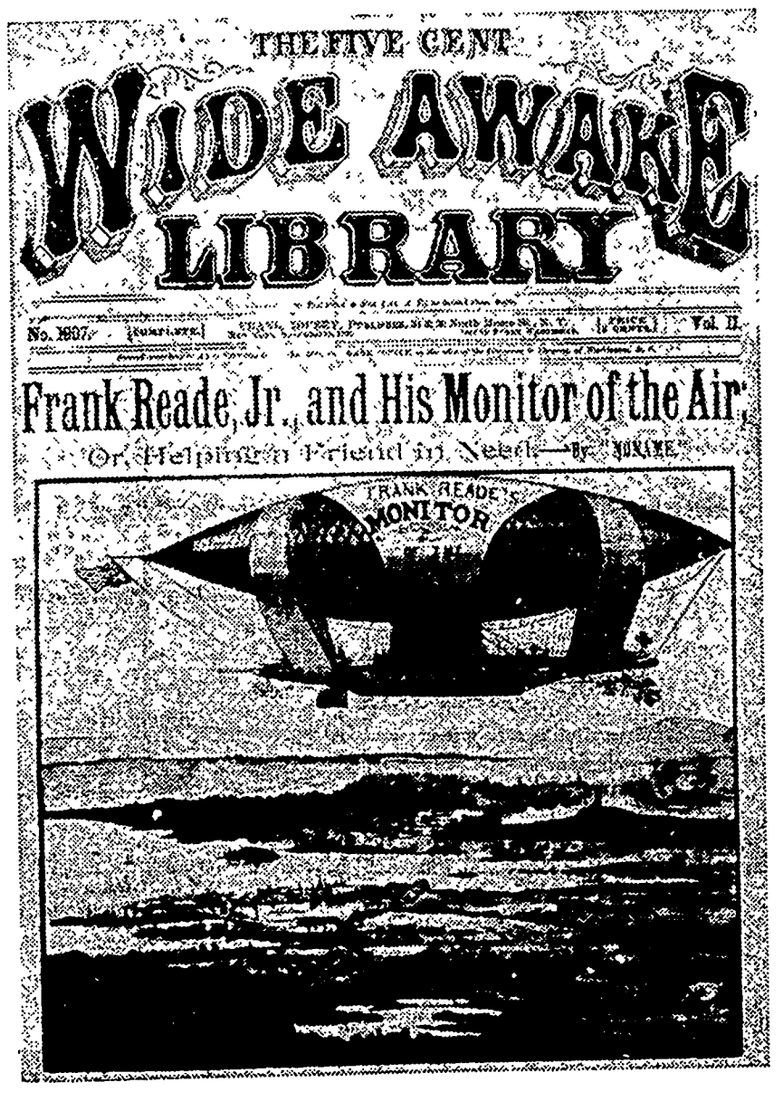
Perhaps the most extraordinary invention of this ingenious youth was his "Clipper of the Prairie," which was a sort of a cross between a war tank and a trailer home on wheels and which Frank used for "Fighting the Apaches in the Far Southwest." Above the cabin, or living quarters, was an observation platform on which were built two turrets and in front of the cabin was mounted a good-sized cannon.

If the "red devils" escaped destruction by the shots from this cannon, they could be impaled upon a sharp ram-like projection from the front of the "clipper." This ram was also useful in getting a supply of fresh meat for Frank and his friends, for the picture on the cover of this particular volume indicates that it was used also for impaling buffalo! Incidentally the "clipper" was propelled by steam on caterpillar-tread wheels which indicates that our "modern" caterpillar tractors are "old stuff."

According to Edmund Pearson in his "Dime Novels; or, Following an Old Trail in Popular Literature" (published by Little, Brown and Company in 1929), the Frank Tousey firm of which Senarens was president in addition to the Frank Reade Weekly, also issued "Work and Win" with its hero, Fred Fearnot; the "Wild West Weekly" with Young Wild West and his sweetheart, Arietta; "Secret Service" with Old King Brady and Young King Brady; and "Pluck and Luck." The Old King Brady stories, he says, "are attributed to Francis Worcester Doughty, who, curiously, was the author of works on numismatics and archeology."

Pearson does not give the authorship of the other Frank Tousey publications but it is not unlikely that Senarens, who was the "Noname" of the Frank Reade Jr. yarns, also wrote most of the others under one of the 27 pseudonyms mentioned in the obituary story quoted at the beginning of this article.





Ten years ago there died in Orlando, Fla., a man whose writing career paralleled that of Luis P. Senarens and the other writers of the nickel libraries and boys' weeklies but whose literary product differed greatly from theirs. He was Kirk Munroe and during the period from 1890 to 1910 one of the biggest events of the year for Young America was the appearance of a new book which had come from his industrious pen.

Munroe was a descendant of Col. William Munroe, who was an orderly sergeant in the Minute Men of Lexington, Mass., when they fired the opening guns of the Revolution. He was born on April 15, 1850, at Prairie du Chien, Wis., where his father and mother, both New Englanders, were living in a mission. He was educated in the common schools of Appleton, Wis., and later in the schools at Cambridge, Mass., where his parents returned for a brief time.

To the Frontier.

When he was sixteen he persuaded his father to allow him to spend his vacation in Kansas City, Mo., which was then a frontier town. He reached that place just as a surveying party under Gen. W. J. Palmer was preparing to explore the vast region west of Kansas City. By making himself useful about the camp of this exploring and surveying party, young Munroe secured a job as a "tape man." Thereafter, for nearly a year, the boy traveled and camped through the wilds. He saw much of Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and California.

He was engaged in numerous skirmishes with hostile Indians, was wounded, frequently went hungry and thirsty and suffered in the biting cold of those western plains and mountains. Once he was the guest of Kit Carson at Fort Garland, Colo. He associated with pioneers, soldiers, western bad men and Indians. He was well acquainted with Buffalo Bill Cody.

In California he found a job as a transit man, and after he had saved sufficient money he took passage for South America, where he traveled extensively before returning to Cambridge.

Kirk Munroe

Once home he entered Harvard, taking an engineering course, but this proved rather slow and he left college at the end of his first year.

He was then nineteen. Once more he went West to Kansas City, but this time he was not so successful in finding work, since the labor of surveying was temporarily suspended, and he came back East.

A Star Reporter.

Then was to occur the incident that largely determined his future career. His familiarity with the Big Horn country, where Custer's force had just been killed, gave him a chance to land a job as a reporter on the New York Sun. Here he found a congenial field for his talents. He soon moved to the New York Times, and there he became a star reporter. A brilliant career in journalism was fairly opening before him when, again, he was diverted into another field.

Harper's started a magazine called Harper's Young People, designed for the youth of the nation, and the editorship of this magazine was offered to Munroe at a salary of $30 a week, about one-third of the pay he had been receiving. Nevertheless, he accepted this offer and began his duties. The magazine was immediately successful. Munroe, two years after he had been made editor, began to write stories for boys. His first book, "Walkulla," was published in 1886.

From that time on his books multiplied with amazing rapidity, until in all he had published 35 volumes. After publishing the first few of these books Munroe gave up his editorial duties to devote himself entirely to writing. He had married Miss Mary Barr, daughter of Amelia Barr, the novelist, and a contributor to the magazine, and together they traveled extensively, both for pleasure and to collect the material for stories. After the death of his wife, he moved to Coconut Grove, Fla., a suburb of Miami, a place which he had visited as a youth in a canoe and had become one of the pioneers and founders of that community before Miami was a town. He lived in seclusion in Coconut Grove for many years and in 1924 married again, this time to Miss Mabel Stearns, daughter of William F. Stearns of Amherst, Mass.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

HOLDING LIFE SACRED

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 1:27-31; I Corinthians 6:19, 20; II Corinthians 6:16-7:1.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body. —I Corinthians 6:20.

Moral action and right living can only be assured on the basis of right thinking. If our principles are right, our action will be sure and our life will be steady. Fundamental in our consideration of temperate living is a right understanding of life itself. Where did we come from? Whom do we resemble? What are the ruling forces in life? To whom do we belong? If he gets these matters straight, any honest man will come out right in his life decisions.

I. Man Was Created in the Image of God (Gen. 1:27-31).

"God created man" — so says Scripture, and all the forces of infidelity and unbelief have not been able to break down that simple statement. The creation story of Genesis stands and will stand. Let no critic of God's Word, no spinner of human philosophies, however plausible, take that assurance from you.

The important point for our lesson is the fact that God created man in His own image; in other words, made him an intelligent, moral and spiritual being. It takes a very gullible person indeed to believe the theory (which, by the way, has never been proved) that man has evolved from some elementary substance by way of the animal into his present high estate. Man came from the hand of God ready to take dominion over the earth (vv 23-30), able to name all the animals (Gen. 2:19, 20), and above all, capable of fellowship with God Little wonder that God declared His creation with man as its crown to be "very good" (1:31).

Remember that you are God's creation and that you bear His likeness and you will have a high regard for your life. You will guard it, develop it, and above all you will commit it in glad surrender to God through Jesus Christ.

II. The Believer Is Indwelt by the Holy Spirit (I Cor 6:19, 20)

Redemption at the great price of Jesus' blood not only makes the believer belong to God (v 20), but also makes his body the temple of the Holy Spirit When the child of God grasps that truth, his attitude toward his body and toward his life which it bears is revolutionized Since the third person of the blessed Trinity dwells in me, I will not abuse, neglect, or misuse my body I will not take it to places where the indwelling Spirit would not go I will not use it or any of its members to do anything which does not honor God. On the other hand, I will yield it without delay and without reservation to the Holy Spirit and count on Him to empower and use it for God's glory

The writer wishes to bear testimony that when this truth laid hold of him, even years after he was converted, it changed his whole life It can do the same for every Christian who reads these lines. And what about the unbeliever? He can accept Christ right now and at once the Holy Spirit will indwell him too Why not?

III. The Believer Should Live a Separated Life (II Cor 6:16-7:1).

We have fallen upon evil days when it seems to be assumed by Christian people that only certain individuals in the Church are called to a life of separation from worldliness Men seem to say, "The preacher? Of course! The deacon? Oh, yes! The elders? Yes! The trustees? Well, not necessarily. Church members? Well, some do and some don't." It is felt that it is just a matter of choice or of disposition, and that the failure to live such a separated life is really no reflection on one's spirituality.

That erroneous view must have come directly from the devil himself. Christian man or woman, will you listen to Satan or to God's Word? Read again II Corinthians 6:16, 17. Note the blessed promise in verse 18, and then heed the admonition in 7:1, "Dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" As Christians, our response to such an admonition should be immediate and complete.

The command and the invitation are to you, Christian friend. If you will respond, there will be a revival in your own heart, and if all those who read these lines will respond to God's invitation and admonition, there will be a revival in thousands of churches all over America this week. Why not?

Thirteen is unlucky for some folks but for the family of Mr. and Mrs. George Yeoman, southeast of Corwith, January 13 seems to have plenty of luck and significance. LABOR INTERESTED

Labor groups in Iowa are reported interested in the Coralville dam project and well they should be. Preliminary surveys would indicate that at least half the total sum required would go into labor costs. This angle will be among the most important of the many aspects of the matter to be studied by state officials. If it be true that no preliminary engineering survey has been made it is probable the figure of $6,000,000 is only a guess at total costs. Thousands of acres of fine farm land will be flooded or rendered useless for agriculture purposes. This will have to be paid for as will vast damage to other properties including the state park at Lake McBride. It is a huge project and merits more than snap judgment. Millions of dollars are to be cut off relief and agricultural budgets for "national defense". Perhaps this six million dollars of the war department's money is a part of that.

I-S-A-S

GAS TAX GROWTH

Charts recently compiled in the office of State Treasurer W. G. C Bagley, illustrate the increase in the use of motor fuel in Iowa since 1925. In that year only $3,215,000 was collected in gasoline taxes and refunds to farmers totalled $68,464. Figures for 1939 just tabulated reveal a total of $16,344,407 and 31 cents in gasoline collections and refunds, chiefly to farmers of $2,261,604 11 Of these $16,434,000 in tax collections about $7,725,000 was paid into the primary road fund while a total of $6,180,000 was paid to counties for secondary roads. Refunds and administrative costs accounted for $2,354,096 More modern methods have enabled the office to get funds into the hands of farmers in two or three days instead of the several weeks delay which had become the custom. And while the office handled 2,500 more refund claims in 1939 than in any former year, administrative costs were reduced from $85,954 to $68,649; a reduction of $17,000. It is interesting to note that where a tax refund is granted to farmers who use gas in tractors and other farm equipment, the state sales tax applies About $175,000 in sales taxes comes from this source each year

I-S-A-S

TRAFFIC SAFETY

It is probably the foolhardy automobile driver who does his cutting up in crowded traffic, crooked roads or under bad weather conditions who attracts the most abuse from authorities and other drivers. However, statistical reports of highway accidents as tabulated by the state reveal that the most accidents happen under what would ordinarily be termed ideal driving conditions. By far the largest percentage of reported accidents occur on straight roads with a dry surface and in clear weather. Speed is blamed for many fatal accidents and probably rightly so. But a statistical report of 1581 accidents reveal 462 cases listed as not "exceeding safe speed" as against only 60 where excessive speed was blamed. More than 100 accidents were listed at six to ten miles per hour. This number rose with the speed until 327 accidents occured at between 21 and 30 miles per hour and then dropped away to only three where the speed exceeded 60 miles per hour

Hundreds of cars of flaxseed are shipped to market annually that contain from 10 to 40 percent of dockage. This dockage often consists to a large extent of weed seeds. Weed seeds are obectionable in flaxseed because many of them absorb oil in the crushing process and therefore reduce the total yield of oil.

PROGRESS

The wisest man may be wiser today than he was yesterday and more tomorrow than today Wisdom is one of life's most helpful assets. He that is good will get better. He that is bad will get worse Virtue and time never stand still. Ruskin said, "He is getting wiser who is never standing still" Fear, desire, and hope are pushing us toward the future

He who has not the spirit of the age, has the misery of it We must keep step with time The greatest desire of progress is to progress Man's real obligation is to spread spirit and wisdom, and to be friendly unto his his fellowmates This is the duty of man.

In Longfellow's poem "Psalm of Life" the first lines are·
"Tell me not, in mournful numbers Life is but an empty dream"
In our lives each one of us can find something to add to our enjoyments. Each one can add a little progress to each generation

Moving on ever upward takes courage. Nature is wise to all reactions. She watches the fool and the wise alike. All of us can work for greater things We must give to receive. What we give will show in the next generation. Nothing is ever entirely lost. Man never loses anything which is physical, intellectual, or moral What is gained by man is gained by all

If you wish to be happy, follow time. We degenerate if we do no advance Browning said, "Progres is the law of life. Man is not man as yet." The great thing in life is not where we stand but what direction we are moving.

SPORTS

Klemme's part in the county tournament was rather small this year; being taken back by Crystal Lake by seven points. We believe the basket ball team will have to admit that the Lake boys have one of the finest teams in the county. Of all the teams we enjoy playing, it was with Crystal Lake, for they are very good sports throughout the game; not only when they are winning, but also when they are losing. We are looking forward to February 2 when we will have a chance to show them that Klemme is still on the calender.

Science Views Low Cost Of Future U. S. Dwellings

Sociologists can trace many of the problems of modern civilization to the breakup of the family structure which in part has come about because the "old family homestead" no longer has much of its original meaning

In prefabricated housing there is more than a little hope that family dwellings can be produced cheap enough so that every family can own one and thus retain its true family character through the formative years in the lives of the children

Harvey Wiley Corbett, New York architect, has described before a meeting of the American Institute some of the benefits which mass production, prefabrication methods, can bring in lowering housing cost.

"The cost of assembling a car is only 1 per cent of its price. But the assembling cost of a house is all of 60 per cent," said Mr Corbett "In order to reduce the cost, this item of assembly will have to be eliminated. This means the end of brick, plaster, lumber, shingles, nails and all sorts of attachments The mass production house will not be possible until its units can be manufactured complete in a factory—complete including all wiring and switches, all plumbing and all service items, such as stoves, sinks, lighting, curtains and door bells.

"The cellar will have to go, and the foundation, too, for there is no reason why a house should not rest on the ground instead of in it Such houses need not be uniform, but they must be made of interchangeable parts to be assembled at the choice of the owner. The first such house will probably cost up toward a million dollars, including the machinery for its manufacture, but after that houses should be available for 30 per cent, or at most 40 per cent, of their present cost Only in this way will we attain the elimination of our slums."

Automobile May Go to Europe With No Trouble

The family automobile may now go to Europe as simply as a trunk and with as little red tape By spending half an hour making out the necessary documents passengers can make all arrangements for touring Europe in advance of actual departure. These documents provide for customs papers, international plates and public liability insurance as well as for international driving licenses, marine insurance and a small supply of gasoline with which to begin the tour.

Highways in major countries are excellent and distances in comparison with distances in the United States are short. Because there are fewer automobiles in Europe the roads are less crowded Membership is possible in a British Automobile club and this means assistance on the road in case of a breakdown Fire, theft, and other forms of insurance may also be arranged for and where there are two drivers in a party, a second license may be obtained for a very nominal fee

Fruit Trees

In the Lewelling wagon train of 1852, both men and beasts might be thirsty, yet night and morning the two Lewelling wagons of little trees were watered most carefully For six weary months the trees waved their green banners across the dusty plains and up and down tortuous mountain passes until, at last, they reached their journey's end near where the town of Milwaukie, Ore., now stands Here they were carefully planted by their far-sighted owners, Henderson and Seth Lewelling Three hundred and fifty trees were said to have survived and matured out of the original 700 nurslings From this stock comes much of Oregon's fine fruit trees, especially her cherries.

Automobiles 'Strength-lined' Too

Everything is being "streamlined" nowadays, and the automobile was one of the early leaders in the movement yet in the case of the car, "strength-lined" would be the more appropriate term. Smoothing the exterior of the automobile has little perceptible effect on air resistance until very high speeds are attained, and several changes would be made in today's car designs if reduction of friction were the primary engineering objective. On the other hand, it would take hundreds of pounds of added re-enforcement to make a square-built vehicle as strong and rattleproof as the modern car. Keeping the weight down makes the car more efficient and economical at all speeds.

Toll Sidewalk

"Buddy, can you spare a dime?" might well have been the query of any a pioneer maid of The Dalles, Ore., as she clung to the arm of her escort at the foot of Union street in the early 1860s. James S. Reynolds had been given a franchise to build a toll sidewalk from the foot of Union street to the boat landing on the Columbia river. Having built it, Reynolds collected a dime for each person who used the walk. Residents were given the choice of paying the dime and walking dry shod to the dock or withholding the money and wallowing through the mud of the street. Oregon weather aided in the success of the venture by keeping the lowlands deep in mire.

TIME WILL TELL

A little boy in a grade-school refused to sew, thinking it beneath the dignity of a 10-year-old.

"George Washington sewed," said the principal, "and do you consider yourself better than George Washington?"

"I don't know; time will tell," said the boy, seriously.

ovely New Wash Prints Make It Fun to Sew for Children

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

OTING mothers that take pride in decking out little daughters t first hint of spring in refreshingly olorful prints, hurry up and take look at the lovely materials just ut. Well wager that at very first eep at the new wash fabric showngs you will be convinced that here's nothing in the world you so ng to do this very minute as to et the spring sewing program in otion.

Time was when buying cotton and ther washable weaves was more or ss of a gamble. In those days the rink and fade bugaboo was forver taking the joy out of life. Now these modern times, because of cientific processing that carries with it a guarantee of non-fade and on-shrink, the "will it wash" query o longer challenges the patiencetied salesperson.

It certainly is a grand and glorious feeling for mothers to know that e dress they have so painstakingly ade will not prove a case of love's labor lost" in that hems on't have to be frantically let own nor sleeve lengths altered, either will buttons have to be set ver after the dress comes back rom the wash It's a wise mother hat asks for guaranteed wash maerials to make up for her child.

Then, too, little daughters come for a share of good fortune in hat no longer will they have to be ubmitted to the humiliating ordeal wearing a dress bought, or made, hat is a size too large in order to llow for shrinking.

This year attractive broadcloths with floral overprinting are catching the eye. Add wearableness to their prettiness and you will readily see why this fabric is so popular. Tailored printed shantung broadcloths and charming striped cottons in fast colors all preshrunk to keep their original fit permanently are selling fast as they can be measured off in dress lengths.

If you are looking for wash materials that carry a promise of wearability, washability, dependability and likability consider the dainty little frocks pictured. Each is fashioned of sanforized-shrunk fabric. The merry little three-year-old pictured to the right wearing a broadcloth dress with floral overprinting is laughing at the thought of the cunning patch pockets that draw up and tie with pique cording. She is proud, too, that her dress ties in the back with a big bow of self-fabric. The dress is trimmed with a pleating of pique around the neck and sleeves. Though the closing is in the back, there are three small red buttons down the front of the bodice.

Sister Ann who sits in the window (centered in the group) wears a tailored shantung broadcloth dress trimmed with hand-fagoted pique collar and cuffs.

The dress for the "between" age, shown to the left, takes on somewhat of a party air. The soft blue and pink colorings of the floral striped broadcloth (so fine it has a sheen like silk) is delicate and becoming to blonde or brunette. There is a fashionable inset corselet belt, thus raising the waistline so that the skirt will swing gracefully if or when she dances.

The idea of a sweater with a hood arries big appeal. This gay cardian is knit of a heavy yet soft arn and on large needles so that he fetching checked pattern develoes magically fast. Such pretty ombinations as red with white, lack with green, wine with postman blue are suggested. The solid olored hood is knitted separately. may be worn either as a hood or collar. The little headpiece beomes a streamlined version of the ig knitted hood. However, minates all superfluous bulk, very attractive

Costume Sweaters Spring Into Style

A new type of sweater, which is neither a tailored sports style nor an elaborate evening affair, has sprung into fashion. These are the sweaters that combine with separate skirts to make smart street frocks. They are most attractive when chosen in a color to match that of the skirt.

Made of novelty knits and ribbed yarns, they are notable for their unusual shoulder and yoke detail. Some of them have flapped pockets in the Schiaparelli manner with buttons of gold nuggets or shiny flat gold circles on the pocket flaps and down the front. Some of them fasten with bright enameled or gold colored slide fasteners.

Skating Ensemble Is Very Fetching

A skating ensemble is made of soft white yarn hand-embroidered with bright wool. There's a snug white cardigan sweater with peasant figures embroidered on panels on either side of the front opening, and matching white mittens with a single design on their back. The close-fitting hood ties under the chin and has embroidered wings like a Dutch cap standing out on either side of the face.

Picturesque Wraps

Inspired by the picturesque fashions of the South in Civil war days is the group of evening wraps showr by an American designer.

Gray for Day and Evening

From soft dove shades to dark gunmetal tones gray is an important color for every sort of daytime and evening outfit.

Suede Sports Jacket

Fine stitching is the blouse-like detail borrowed by a fitted suede sports jacket to give it a dressy appearance.

JOAN CRAWFORD is as popular as ever, judging by the welcome that she received from the fans when she arrived in New York not long ago for a brief vacation. She was accompanied by two dachshunds, Stinky, which is hers, and Pupschen, which belongs to her ex-husband, Franchot Tone, with whom she is on the friendliest of terms.

Fetchingly dressed when she arrived, she rushed straight to her favorite milliner's and ordered hats —all kinds of hats, rather goofy ones, the kind so many of her fans like to have her wear.

Twentieth Century-Fox is going to film the history of radio, probably next fall, with Alice Faye and Don Ameche starring in a tale that will cover the development from crystal sets to television.

Did you know that that dashing hero of the films, William Powell, wore a gray suit and a sweater to his own wedding? The bride took the occasion more seriously, sartorially; she wore a blue flowered print dress and a turban that matched it. But then, she hadn't been married twice before! You'll see her before long in "Forty Little Mothers," and you may have seen her on the screen already, without knowing it; as Diana Lewis she's been just one more promising young actress. She's beautiful and talented, and acting is an old story to her—her parents used to be headliners in vaudeville.

If the British government had been as eager to send David Niven to war as he was to go, he could have taken with him—and probably would have—a novel memento of Hollywood. It is the service cap which he wore in the role of a young English officer in "Dawn Patrol." Louis Hayward, playing the role of an English captain in one of the sequences of "My Son, My Son!", in which he has one of the top roles, drew an army cap from wardrobe. He noticed the initials "D. N." in the band, and learned that it was Niven's "Dawn Patrol" cap, so he bought it and sent it to his friend.

Time was when a screen star couldn't be sued for divorce and hope to carry on with her career. And although she planned to marry someone else as soon as she was free, she wouldn't have said so as frankly as Vivian Leigh has. It seems likely that her studio would have been just as well pleased if her husband had not chosen to sue her while "Gone With the Wind" was still at the height of its glory, but she did so well in it that the publicity regarding her private life probably won't keep the public from clamoring to see her in "Waterloo Bridge."

It's not unusual to hear a few bars of "God Bless America" in traffic jams in New York these days. People look about and stare, and if they're lucky they catch a glimpse of Kate Smith in the car whose horn startled them. A horn manufacturing company gave the horn to Miss Smith as a present; the driver just presses a button, and a bit of the patriotic song that she made famous rings out.

Title to the title, "Buck Benny Rides Again," has changed hands three times. When Benny's authors, Morrow and Beloin, first used the idea it automatically became the property of the comedia, as does all their material. With characteristic generosity, Benny gave it back to the writers.

Now they have sold the title to Paramount, the company for which they wrote Benny's new picture.

ODDS AND ENDS

Radio headliners getting top billing in "Village Barn Dance," a feature length picture now in production at Republic Studios, are Don Wilson, Barbara Jo Allen, (Vera Vague), The Kidoodlers and Uncle Ezra.

Jean Darling, once the heroine of "Our Gang" films, is studying for opera.

The William L. White whom you hear broadcasting from Finland these evenings is the son of the famous William Allen White, editor of the Emporia, Kansas, Gazette.

SERVE A MODERN FRUIT PIE AND A CANDY RAIL FENCE IN HONOR OF LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY

See Recipes Below

For Patriotic Parties

February, with its two famous birthdays, is a grand month for a patriotic party—with novel decorations and unusual foods, to help make it a success.

Lincoln, the biographers tell us, had a keen "sweet tooth." Children could always be sure he'd have a bag of bonbons in his pocket when he dropped in to visit. Fruit pies were favorites with him, too, so you'll be historically correct to feature a fruit pie when you plan your Lincoln's birthday menu.

"Chocolate Fence Rails" are a novel sweet that will pay double tribute to Lincoln's rail splitting fame and his "sweet tooth." Use three of the fence rails tied in a bundle with a bit of red, white, and blue ribbon, for individual table favors at your party.

Everyone knows the significance of cherry pie at a Washington's birthday party, of course, but few people know that cherry pie a la mode has a double historical meaning! George Washington has been credited, by some historians, with being the inventor of the first ice cream freezer.

You'll find suggestions for almost any kind of party you can name, in my booklet "Easy Entertaining." There are ideas for unusual menus, hints on party short-cuts, too, and a store of practical, tested recipes. With Valentine's day and Easter, ahead, and birthdays in the offing, you'll want to add this useful, inexpensive booklet to your kitchen library.

Salad Roll Sandwich.

Slit long, plump, soft rolls down the center, not quite through. Scoop out a little of the inside. Brush with melted butter, and heat. Stuff with any desired salad sandwich spread. (Don't try to push the sides of the sandwich together again!) Serve on a lettuce leaf, and garnish with olives.

Magic Chocolate Logs.

1 square unsweetened chocolate
⅔ cup sweetened condensed milk
¼ teaspoon vanilla
1¼ cup sifted confectioners' (4x) sugar
½ cup coconut (toasted)

Melt chocolate in top of double boiler. Add sweetened condensed milk and stir over rapidly boiling water five minutes or until mixture thickens. Remove from heat. Add vanilla and confectioners' sugar gradually and blend thoroughly. Shape into rolls, two inches long. Roll in toasted coconut. Allow to stand in cold place several hours or until firm. Makes about two dozen.

Apricot Pie.

1½ tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter (melted)
2 cups cooked dried apricots (drained)
½ cup canned crushed pineapple (drained)
1 cup apricot juice
1 recipe pie crust

Combine quick-cooking tapioca, sugar, salt, butter, fruit, and fruit juices; let stand 15 minutes, or while pastry is being made. Line 9-inch pie plate with about ½ of pastry, rolled ⅛ inch thick, allowing pastry to extend 1 inch beyond edge. Fold edge back to form standing rim. Fill with apricot mixture Moisten edge of pie with cold water and arrange layout of pastry stars across top. Flute rim with fingers. Bake in hot oven (425 degrees) 10 minutes; then decrease heat to moderate (350 degrees) and bake 35 minutes longer. Cool. Serve with or without whipped cream. For a gala dessert, top with a scoop of vanilla ice cream.

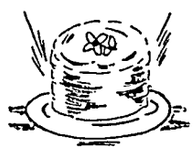
Potato Chips.

4 medium sized potatoes
2 or 3 pounds fat
Salt

Pare and cut potatoes into very thin slices. Allow sliced potatoes to stand in ice water until firm (about 1 hour). Heat fat to 375 degrees. Blot potatoes dry with a clean towel and place potato slices in French fry basket. Immerse basket in hot fat by handle. Keep potatoes moving constantly so that the slices do not stick together. Remove basket and drain potatoes on brown paper. Sprinkle with salt. Temperature: 375 degrees; Time: 2 minutes or to desired brownness.

Individual Sandwich Loaves.

Cut 2½-inch rounds from thinly sliced white bread, allowing 4 rounds for each sandwich. Brush one side of each round of bread with soft butter. Leave 1 round of buttered bread plain to be used for the top layer. Spread each of the remaining rounds with a different sandwich filling, varying both the flavor and the color. These two combinations are good.



1. Watercress or shredded lettuce
   Ground ham, sweet pickle, and mayonnaise
   Deviled egg sandwich spread
2. Olive-nut filling
   Minced pimento mixed with softened butter
   Sardine sandwich spread

"Frost" the top and sides of each sandwich with cream cheese, moistened to spreading consistency with a little salad dressing. On top, arrange a sprig of watercress and a slice of stuffed olive, to resemble a flower. Serve on lettuce leaf with small, sweet pickles.

Cherry Tarts.

3 cups red pitted cherries (with juice)
¾ cup sugar
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons cornstarch
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon butter

Drain juice from cherries and heat to boiling point. Mix sugar, flour, cornstarch, and salt, and add to the cherry juice. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Cool slightly and add lemon juice, butter and cherries. Pour into baked pastry tart shells. Serve with whipped cream.

It really is possible to build a FHA home for $2,500 and your payments would not run as much as rent and you must remember that these payments include taxes and insurance.

WHY NOT be paying for your own home with the rent checks and live in it! WHEN YOU HAVE PAID 10, 15 OR 20 YEARS RENT, YOU WILL HAVE A HOME OF YOUR OWN! !

TWENTY YEARS soon slip by, they are gone before one realizes it and if one does not make a move to get a home early in life, he has to be contented with what he has, DON'T be contented until you are paying rent on your own home! ! !

FHA is not as big a ball of RED TAPE as you have imagined it At least why not get FHA'S side of it direct. It's pretty easy to be informed that it's out of reach, on account of red tape and other draw backs

Juneau Is Still Gateway To Yukon and Klondike

Juneau, capital of Alaska, offers proof that a rose by any other name is still as sweet, for it has survived a succession of name changes

Scene of one of the earliest gold rushes in Alaskan history, Juneau has always been closely associated with the development of the territory and once welcomed prospectors, adventurers and sourdoughs on their way to the Klondike

Juneau first came into prominence when Dick Harris and Joe Juneau discovered gold there in 1880 The succession of names for the city began shortly after the discovery of gold. According to old accounts, a man named Rockwell brought a large party of miners to the site, and they gratefully named the town Rockwell. But Dick Harris was one of the most forceful and colorful men in the community and, as a consequence, the residents soon changed the name to Harrisburg.

It would be Harrisburg to this day if Joe Juneau had not sold out many of his holdings in 1882 and became a wealthy man. Joe wanted to retire, but the miners insisted that he throw a big celebration first. To provide an excuse for one they held a meeting and changed the name of the town to Juneau, neglecting to say that as soon as the holiday was over they were going to change the name back to Harrisburg.

Joe was so pleased that he made a large cash contribution for a blowout and the festivities lasted so long that the miners forgot all about changing back the name when the celebration was over. Juneau, therefore, has remained Juneau to this day.

Juneau remains the gateway to the Yukon and the scenic splendor of Alaska. Travelers journey north from there to Skagway, Carcross, White Horse and Dawson through a district made famous by the poems of Robert W. Service and the novels of Jack London.

Eye Trouble.

For six years, Harold Hindman, Albia farm youth, hadn't been absent or tardy from school. When he was ready to start the ninth grade last fall a blow came. An eye specialist told the boy he should stay at home to protect his eyes and to strengthen them for the next year. It was hard to stay out of school but Harold's school mates remembered him by purchasing him a radio which he uses at home.

Three Hundred Fifty Patrons At Annual Creamery Meeting

O. STORVICK, MANAGER IOWA STATE BRAND, MASON CITY, SPEAKER ON PROGRAM

Nearly Half Million Pounds Of Golden Butter Made By Creamery Past Year

The first annual meeting of the Klemme Co-op Creamery under its new plan, was held Saturday, Feb. 3, at the gymnasium of the new school building, with about 350 patrons present.

After the meeting was called to order by President C J Wille, Mr. C. D. Lizer, auditor of the Farmers' Grain Dealers Association of Fort Dodge, discussed the financial statement to the members, emphasizing the economical way in which the creamery was run and also the good financial condition of the creamery.

Since this was the first meeting under the strictly co-operative basis, it was necessary to elect all directors. The following directors were elected for 3 year term: C. J Wille, Otto Pringnitz, Wes Lenz; 2 year term: Carl Wille, E. J. Schneider; 1 year term: R. W. Elmer, Emil Blumer and Henry Nolte.

At noon, the directors and their wives served lunch to all present.

After lunch a musical program, consisting of accordion numbers by Arlene and Irene Schmidt, guitar and accordion numbers by Merlin and Richard Ulrich, vocal selections by Donnie Schaefer and a high school mixed quartette, comprising Allen Barz, Howard Koenwetter, Elsie Thieman and Jacqueline Kudje with Mrs Edna Josten as accompanist.

Mr. R. O. Storvick, manager of the Iowa State Brand Creameries at Mason City, gave a very interesting talk on quality of cream and also where the butter is shipped and distributed in the different parts of the United States since the freight rates to the west coast have been changed, they have now found an outlet to California.

Mr. Storvick personally invited the patrons of the Klemme Creamery to attend the annual meeting of the Iowa State Brand Creameries at Mason City, on the last Thursday in June.

Nearly a half million pounds of butter was manufactured during the year, of which 429,824 pounds was shipped; 34,472 pounds was sold to patrons and 21,530 pounds sold locally. The average price paid to patrons was over 28 cents per pound.

THREE GAMES PLAYED ON LOCAL FLOOR TUESDAY EVE.

Coach Bodge Bowles' Klemme High School Shamrocks got back on the winning side of the ledger again Tuesday night with an impressive 35 to 25 victory over Ventura. The game was a walk-away for the locals in the first half, as they built up a 20 to 9 lead by intermission time. Then a generous sprinkling of substitutions evened up the contest and kept the margin practically the same for the remainder of the game.

Barz and Brinkman led the scoring parade with eight points each. Grange and Grosshuesch got six and five respectively, and Coobs, Stille and Jacobs all entered the scoring column with at least two points. For Ventura, Bachman took the scoring honors with ten points.

PROCLAMATION

America For American Ideals

The anniversary of the nativity of two great patriots, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, is a time for renewal of inspiration and fortifying the will to emulate them in their service to humanity.

As Americans we pay homage to the memory of the founder and that of the preserver of a nation that has in its keeping the destiny of men. As Iowans, we rejoice in our century of unwavering loyalty to the civic ideals and public policies that are a beacon for all liberty lovers. Our State first born of the passion for human freedom, observes as holidays the birth dates of the president who ended colonial dependence and the president who banished human slavery. This year, as in every other crisis threatening the disruption of human relations, we invoke spiritual guidance and offer the noble example of service and sacrifice of these two great Americans.

The cycle of time has confirmed the effectiveness for peace and stability of the American way of democracy within the pattern of representative government as conceived by these two masters of statesmanship. Out of Washington's lofty concept of national independence and Lincoln's consuming love for the common man, the great republic was founded, expanded, preserved and attained strength to stand today without rival as a force for the advancement of the human race. Thoughtful study of what they did will confirm the faith of all in the final triumph of government by and for the people.

I am pleased to suggest that on the 12th and 22nd of the month of February, we make special effort to do honor to the patriots mentioned, and that the intervening days be filled with events for recalling and proclaiming all that is good in the American way. Let us consult freely, discuss candidly, and exercise judgment with tolerance and prudence. Let us put all our hearts and all our strength back of every measure to preserve the chapter of liberties, to maintain the integrity of our free institutions, to protect the national honor from even the taint of degredation, to assure national solvency and clear the way for national prosperity and to support all reasonable proposals for making sure the national defense from foes within and foes without. Let us keep America for American ideals.

Therefore I, Geo A Wilson Governor, do hereby declare and designate to be: LINCOLN DAY, Monday February 12, 1940; WASHINGTON DAY, Thursday February 22, 1940; and NATIONAL AMERICANIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP WEEK the intervening time.

I would that the patriotic people of Iowa, men and women and children, unite with civic, patriotic and other loyal organizations and agencies in making the days designated memorable for their helpfulness to all that we hold most dear in the state and in the nation.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed, at Des Moines, this first day of February in the Year of Our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Forty, and in the Independence of the United States of America, and of the State of Iowa the Ninety-Fourth.

BRITT MAN IS VICTIM OF GUNSHOT

"Rudy" Miller, Buyer Of Stock, Killed When Crawling Through Fence

BRITT — Rudolph H "Rudy" Miller, 49 year old Britt stockbuyer, died Sunday morning from an accidental shotgun wound.

The local man, intending to hunt for rabbits on the Miller family farm as he went to look at a herd of cattle, was shot through the neck with a 410 gauge shotgun charge. The gun apparently was discharged as he crawled through a fence.

Lawrence Schambers, living nearby, saw Miller fall and fail to rise. Investigating, he found the stockbuyer dead.

Mrs. Miller, his widow, two sons, Charles and Robert, and a daughter, Marion, survive.

Miller's mother, Mrs. Charles Miller, a brother Mark, and a sister, Mrs. Guy McGinnis, also survive. All are residents of Britt except Marion, who is attending Stephens College at Coumbia, Mo.

The accident occured at 8:15 a m Sunday.

NOW IS GOOD TIME TO PREPARE FENCE POSTS

Spare time this winter can be profitably utilized by farmers in preparing a supply of longer-life fence posts, suggests foresters at Iowa State College.

By means of a simple method of treating timber in open tanks with coal-tar creosote, such short-lived woods as soft maple, beech, birch, sweet gum and black gum and red oak are made durable for use in the ground for 10 to 30 years.

The two most important essentials for getting posts ready for treatment consists of carefully removing all outer and inner bark, especially at the ground line, and making sure that the wood to be treated is thoroughly seasoned. It is generally advisable to treat round posts rather than split posts because the sap woood takes up the preservative better than the heart wood.

The best treatment is that which results in the deepest penetration into the wood with the least absorption of creosote. A good method is to place the butts of the posts in creosote heated to a temperature of 180 to 220 degrees F. for 1 to 2 hours.

Treating a willow or cottonwood post with creosote oil will increase the average life from 3 to 4 years to over 20 years, according to the Iowa State foresters. It is not profitable to treat lasting woods such as red cedars, black locust and white oak.

WPA WORK SCHEDULED TO BEGIN NEXT WEEK ON OLD SCHOOL

Work on wrecking the old school house has been postponed a few days by the WPA authorities, who notified local Legionaires that WPA work originally scheduled to start February 8th will now be started on Tuesday, February 13th.

The work of wrecking and salvaging material from the old school house will be under the direction of WPA men skilled in that line of work. It is expected that a dozen or fifteen men will be employed to begin with and more men will be added as work progresses in wrecking the old building.

WPA labor will also be available in erecting the new Klemme Legion Community Hall, and actual work on that structure will be started in the near future, it is thought.

The new Legion Community Hall will fill a long felt need for a building for public meetings, recreation center and various community activities.

VAGABONDS SCORE AGAIN!

Monday night, the Vagabonds added a couple more victories to their credit, when they defeated two strong Rockford teams on the local floor.

The Vagabonds' second team won their game by a score of 38 to 22. This game was nip and tuck all through the first half, with neith team gaining a substantial margin. But in the second half, the boys settled down and showed the Rockford boys how basketball should be played. R. Keeper and Brinkman shared scoring honors in the game, with each getting 11 points.

In the second game of the evening, saw two strong teams in action and at the start of the game it was doubtful as to which one would win. The Rockford had the lead in the first quarter and part of the second, but then Klemme got started and from that time on they ciuldn't be stopped.

Bodge Bowles, Klemme's wizard at the art of handling a basketball, led the scoring attack and nearly burnt the nets off of the baskets to collect 27 points, while Trampel collected 12.

Lohr, for Rockford, looked best for his team with a total of 23 points.

Next Monday night, Feb. 12th, the Vagabonds play the Aztexs, which is a Mexican team and who are rated as being good. So plans keep this date in mind if you want to see a couple of good basketball games.

Peace Memorial Links Canada to United States

The spirit of friendship and peace between two nations is typified in the memorial in Vancouver's timbered Stanley park, which is visited by thousands yearly. Here Canada has erected a memorial preserving in permanent form the message of President Harding, who was the first President of the United States to enter Canada while in office.

American, Canadians and travelers from all over the world have read the message preserved in bronze here in the beautiful setting provided by this shipping metropolis of British Columbia.

"No grim-faced fortifications mark our frontiers, no huge battleships patrol our dividing waters, no stealthy spies lurk in our tranquil border hamlets. Only a scrap of paper, recording hardly more than a simple understanding, safeguards lives and properties on the Great Lakes, and only humble mile posts mark the inviolable boundary line for thousands of miles through forest and farm.

Our protection is in our fraternity, our armor is our faith, the tie that binds more firmly year by year in ever-increasing acquaintance and comradeship through interchange of citizens, and the compact is not of perishable parchment, but of fair and honorable dealing, which, God grant, shall continue for all time."

Sequin and Jewel Embroidery On Wool Is Fashion's Latest

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IF YOU are seeking drama, thrill and adventure in fashion's realm, read on and you will get all three, for it's exciting news we are about to tell you. For sheer breathtaking news what could be more so than to announce balbriggan embroidered with glittering jewels and silver threads as fashion's latest whim. Which goes to show to what extremes designers will go to achieve the new and the beautiful in costume design.

The charming dress pictured to the left tells the story, in that it is fashioned of simple balbriggan enriched with sparkling diamond embroidery interworked with silver thread. And a very significant fashion it is, for it carries the message that embroidery worked on knitted fabric and wool weaves is highly important news for midseason and the months to come. Note the peg-top skirt with its pocket detail. Which is more news and vastly important for this is the silhouette in versatile interpretation you will be seeing throughout the spring style parade.

See the very elegant evening ensemble centered in the group. The material is champagne flannel embellished with gold applique and embroidery. The decollette neckline is softly shirred in front and goes low in the back. It is the jacket dress of this type and others equally as interesting that has become the theme among themes in the fashion world for evening wear. A spider web snood of gold thread, together with black gloves and bag give dramatic accent.

If you are in society you perforce must have one or more stunning evening wraps. The newest turn of fashion is to make your formal floor-length coat of a handsome wool material. White tweed is tops and there are also choice flannels, duvetyns, broadcloths, repps and twills that are well liked. The glamorous white evening coat shown to the right is typical of the new trend. It is in heavy white tweed with distinctive gold kid applique and embroidery. Her evening accessories are in gold, likewise the six buttons that fasten the coat.

Speaking of embroidery on wool the new treatment applies to daytime fashions as well as to evening modes. The newest out are the cunning wool classics in pastel which feature dresses tailored to perfection. Many of these have large shapely pockets so gaily embroidered they give color dash to the entire costume. As to the countless wool sweaters, both sports and formal types, their name is legion.

The neat black dress does not escape the embroidery craze. Like a blaze of glory colorful sequin embroidery illuminates sleeves, necklines and often the waistline, for the wide embroidered belt is an outstanding style feature. White beadwork on the black or navy dress is also style-approved.

Not only embroidery but all sorts of surface decoration enhance fashionable apparel this season. Favor for Trapunto quilted design is not on the wane. Then, too, there is considerable cording being done row upon row, likewise stitching and fine tucking.

Very new indeed is the applique of self wool fabric that is being worked out on the new pastel frocks. Flowers and other motifs are cut out of the self wool material, then worked on the bodice in various ways. Fact is, designers are manipulating the new and beautiful woolens with a display of originality and imagination that is amazing. Perhaps this has come about in that modern woolens are so all-intriguing they challenge talent and genius to give of their best in creating of them fashions of surpassing chic and charm.

Warm Ski Suit

A successful ski suit has to be warm, has to be practical and must be good-looking. The model pictured is all that and more. The outfit is of dark green gabardine with just enough wool-knit worked into the jacket front to be protective and "comfy." Elastic at the waist insures a snug fit. Depend upon it this suit will give real service, besides being so good looking your friends will all admire.

Dark and Misty

A color as subtle as its name is one of Schiaparelli's new dark tones called "thick mist." It is a slatey, bluish gray, almost smoky in tone, and considered important both for day and evening clothes.

Daring Colors Are Seen in New Mode

Describing a sports ensemble worn at a recent gathering of smartly dressed guests—the skirt, a pleated black model, the jacket in bright fuchsia worn over a violet sweater, accessory touches including turquoise costume jewelry and a stunning draped turban done in Roman stripes that picked up the various colors throughout the costume. To be sure a color ensemble like this requires a master stroke of artistry to carry it through successfully, which brings us to the message we would convey, namely that while daring things are being done with color in the new fashions, they are carried out with the color sense of a true artist to the extent that women who follow in fashion's footsteps are developing a high sense of color values. In fact this season's modes gives promise of being truly educational in color artistry.

The new duo-color costumes are especially interesting that play one color up against another fearlessly, such as for instance navy with a gray blouse and a gypsy tie girdle in green and cerise. Pastels are being contrasted after the same manner. One designer uses pink with blue satin for a charming blouse.

Gray Dinner Frock For Informal Wear

All in tones of gray, even to its metallic embroidery, is the dinner costume meant to be worn for informal evenings at a northern winter resort. The outfit consists of a brief knitted gray evening sweater embroidered with silver sequins and makes an attractive outfit.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

(Consolidated Features—WNU Service.)

NEW YORK.—The recent emancipation proclamation of Kenesaw Mountain Landis, freeing an oppressed minority of major and minor league ball players, reminded this courier of the big blizzard in Chicago, along about the year 1906. I was a new and much bewildered reporter from the sticks, tossed into the maelstrom of a federal court railroad case because there was nobody else to send except the office boy. It was as intelligible as a squirrel cage. The defending attorney loosed a gas attack of statistics and my pencil dropped from my limp fingers.

Newshound Got Landis Aid and Praise of Chief

The judge, a little, brown wheat-straw of a man with a chrysanthemum thatch, got me in the sharp focus of his bright agate eye. I hadn't been wrecking any trains or robbing banks, but I began to fear the worst. I wondered whether my elaborate ignorance of what was happening could possibly be construed as a federal offense.

Then the blow fell. The judge gavelled down the spouting lawyer and said the court would take a brief recess. Then he beckoned me into his chambers. He asked me to sit down.

Then he said: "I hadn't seen you at the press table before. This case is confusing. I thought I might help you in getting it straight. It's like this . . ." In a few concise sentences he brought the courtroom hub-bub into something understandable. I managed to write a story about it without breaking my arm and got my first pat on the back from a city editor who was no spendthrift with such gestures.

The voltairean little Judge Landis was like that, and any newspaper man who ever knew him will insist that his $65,000-a-year honorarium as baseball commissioner isn't half enough. He was a corporation lawyer before he began calling strikes on big business, and was appointed to the federal bench by Theodore Roosevelt at the peak of T. R.'s trust-busting rampage. In his dual capacity he has punished two of the major institutions of America, the Standard Oil company and Babe Ruth, the former with a $29,000,000 fine.

He was a newsboy in Logansport, Ind.; a semi-pro baseball player; a stenographer and court clerk at 18, and soon thereafter a law school graduate and practicing lawyer. His appointment as national commissioner of baseball grew out of the "Black Sox" scandal in 1919.

THE easy-going free-for-all of American journalism, in which public officials sometimes owe their high status to an understanding of newspaper men and how to get on with them, has given this country a decided advantage over the European countries in wartime press relations. In the World war and now in the present war Europe has demonstrated the limitations of even the most intelligent of its bureaucrats in co-operating with the press. While England and France have, traditionally, a free press, the human contacts between the correspondents and high officialdom are still lacking, and both countries are snarled in censorship troubles.

U. S. Has Edge On Europe in Press Relations

At the start of the war, liberal opinion noted with satisfaction that France and England had appointed, respectively, to their ministries of information, a distinguished literary man and playwright, and a leading scholar. It seemed to be an exemplification of their war aims. But, like the brass hats of the past, they didn't seem to understand newspapers or newspaper men.

The scholarly Lord MacMillan of England has faded into the background, and his press censor, Vice Admiral C. V. Usborne, is replaced by the clubby and gregarious Sir Walter T. Monckton. In France, Jean Giradoux, the playwright, is still minister of information, but his office inspires bitter stories in the American press about fantastic restrictions. The censorship tangle is an issue of daily mounting importance in France.

Newspaper men liked M. Giradoux tremendously when he was spokesman for the French ministry of foreign affairs a few years ago. He was perhaps, in Goethe's phrase, "all too human" for any careful grooving of public opinion—his own is ironic and whimsical—and has been surrounded with a bulwark of bureaucracy against which newspaper men are thrown for a loss. He is a charming, monocled gentleman of 53, who was severely gassed in the World war and so speaks in a husky voice. He did a short turn at Harvard before the World war.

'QUINT HOUSE'

The Dionne quints are to get back the custody of their parents.

The plan to provide a home in which the kids can live with their own folks is making progress. Everybody feels that it is time the children experienced the heavy responsibility of having parents around the house.

Plans for Quint House are said to be in the works already. There will be 14 in the family exclusive of help. This hands the architects the initial problem of deciding whether to design a home or a clubhouse.

It will present many novel problems. Any home with five kids the same age in it needs the best brains the architectural profession can provide. Requirement Number One is a room where pop and mom can get some rest.

Then there will have to be a reception room for corporations seeking indorsements, picture rights, etc., a conference room for the board of directors and a series of projection rooms.

And, of course, a rumpus room for use when Dr. Dafoe and Papa Dionne have anything to discuss.

For nearly six years pop has been able to see the children only by appointment. Dr. Dafoe has been head man with the Ontario government next, Mommer Dionne next and papa a bad last. You can understand popper's resentment. You know how proud and important a man feels when he is the father of one child; imagine his feelings when he is told he is the daddy of five, but doesn't count!

The quintuplets are an industry rather than a family. In fact they are one of the few business institutions to be able to make big money for the last five years.

It got so the obvious reply to "How are the children doing?" was "Very well. They are 30 per cent ahead of last year for the third quarter."

With the children occupying such a position in the financial world it was best to surround them with guardianships, boards, commissions, and interlocking directorates during their more tender years. Business responsibilities are not good for a growing child.

But Dr. Dafoe has come to the conclusion it is a good thing for children to have parents. In fact he feels that all kiddies look forward to having a father and mother some day when they can afford it.

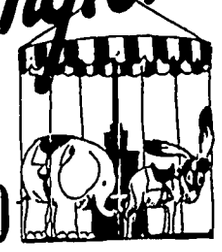
The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND



Britain Buying 10,000 Combat Planes in U. S. . . . Hope Psychological Effect on German People May Hasten Peace.

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT ALLEN

WASHINGTON.—Few knew that Lord Riverdale, co-ordinator of British air defense, was in Washington several days ago.

What Riverdale reported was that the French and British now have patched up their argument over strategy, and the British have accepted the French thesis that in the last analysis this war must be fought out in the air.

The factor which finally influenced this policy was the now recognized failure of the British blockade. More and more German merchant ships have been slipping through.

As a result of all this, Lord Riverdale flew to Canada and the United States to arrange for the largest airplane manufacturing campaign in the history of the world. In the United States alone, Britain will buy 10,000 combat planes.

Simultaneously the British are stepping up their own airplane production, now 1,000 a month, so that by March or April they will be turning out 2,000 planes monthly.

One reason the British are particularly banking upon the American planes is because of their effect upon German psychology. So far the German people have discounted any air offensive from the Allies. However, British government leaders believe that not even the most efficient Nazi censors can keep from the German people the impact of what the purchase of 10,000 American planes will mean.

Mrs. Jock Whitney — Ethel du Pont Roosevelt — Doris Duke Cromwell

Most interesting table at the Jackson day dinner was No. 4, immediately under President Roosevelt's nose, and occupied by three of the wealthiest women in America. They were:

Doris Duke Cromwell, wife of the new minister to Canada and heiress of the vast Duke tobacco millions. She is a contributor to the Roosevelt campaign fund.

Ethel duPont Roosevelt, daughter-in-law of the President. Her family owns the biggest munitions and chemical industry in the world, and controls the biggest automobile industry—General Motors.

Mrs. Jock Whitney, whose family owns part of Pan-American airways and is one of the oldest of the "First Sixty Families of America."

None over 30 years old, together they have a finger in a sizeable amount of American wealth. Yet they are great favorites with Roosevelt.

And while Speaker Bankhead opined on the many liberal, if not radical reforms of the New Deal, these three looked very bored, but very, very beautiful.

Florida Ship Canal.

Dynamic Senator Pepper of Florida once again will bring the Florida ship canal before congress, asking for action at this session.

Senator Pepper

Its proponents have a new argument and a new money plan. Their money plan has two alternatives. One would be for the federal government to underwrite bonds of the Florida ship canal authority. The other plan—which is preferred—would be for RFC to buy the bonds of the authority. This could be done under existing powers of the RFC.

Disclosed for the first time is the fact that last year, a syndicate of British banks, including the giant Midland bank, offered to buy bonds of the canal to the total sum of $190,000,000 sufficient to cover the entire cost of construction.

The Democratic national committee meets on February 5, which is before the Republican national committee meets. That doesn't mean the Demoorats have abandoned their determination to hold their convention after the Republicans. However, the Democratic strategy is not only to nominate after the G. O. The Democratic theory is the shorter the campaign, the better.

Recent Order Retiring Some of Army's Mules Recalls Valuable Services of Pack Trains in Indian-Fighting Days

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

THE "streamlining" of our regular army, now in rapid process, may be necessary to keep pace with the demands of modern warfare, but as a result of it there's a glum group of men among our soldiers these days. They are the "mule-skinners," men who have charge of the long-eared quadrupeds used by the machine gun, howitzer and headquarters companies of the various infantry regiments in the new "streamlined" infantry divisions—the First, in the East; the Second, in Texas and the Southwest; the Third, on the Pacific coast; and the Fifth, in the Middle West.

They have been ordered to turn in all of their animals to the quartermaster's department as a result of the complete motorization of these regiments which will speed up their tactical movements from 2½ miles per hour to 35 miles per hour and the same fate is in store for the mules in other infantry divisions as they become motorized. What is to be done with these faithful beasts has not yet been determined by the quartermaster-general, but it is certain that henceforth the mule-drawn machine gun cart in Uncle Sam's army will be a thing of the past.

Hereafter recruits will learn the care of motors instead of mules and as a result a favorite army joke will have to be revised. For years there has been a saying among the doughboys that the "mule-skinners" have associated with their cantankerous charges for so long that not only their dispositions but also their facial characteristics came to resemble those of the mules.

This does not mean, however, that the "army mule" is a vanishing American. Take the word of Maj.-Gen. Daniel Van Voorhis for that! He has been in the cavalry for almost 40 years and he also organized and commanded the modern mechanized Seventh Cavalry brigade at Fort Knox. He believes that the day will never come when an army can get along without mules and horses and rely solely upon motors. Speedy and efficient though trucks and other motorized vehicles may be, they can never entirely replace the surefooted and enduring hybrids when munitions and supplies are to be transported over certain types of terraine.

Crook's Pack Train Famous.

Whatever the future of the army mule may be, he has already won a permanent and honorable place in the military history of our country. Especially was this true during the Indian campaigns in the West and the literature of that era is filled with references to the pack trains of mules and their masters, the "packers," which accompanied most of the army expeditions against the redskins. Outstanding among the successful Indian-fighters was Gen. George Crook and no little part of his success was due to his recognition of the value of a good pack train and his determination to have one of the best. He began developing this invaluable adjunct to the forces under his command during the Apache campaigns in Arizona in the early seventies and some of the best descriptions of the operation of an army pack train are to be found in the book "On the Border with Crook" (published by Charles Scribner's Sons in 1891), by Capt. John G. Bourke, who writes:

"General Crook was at all times anxious to secure for his men while on campaign all the necessaries of life, and to do that he knew from his very wide experience that there was nothing to compare to a thoroughly organized and well-equipped pack train, which could follow a command by night or by day, and into every locality, no matter how rocky, how thickly wooded, or how hopelessly desert. He made the study of pack trains the great study of his life, and had always the satisfaction of knowing that the trains in the department under his control were in such admirable condition, that the moment trouble was threatened in other sections, his pack trains were selected as being best suited for the most arduous work . . .

"The idea upon which Crook worked, and which he successfully carried out, was to select trains under the pack-masters who had enjoyed the widest experience, and were by nature best adapted to the important duties they would be called upon to perform. Those who were too much addicted to alcoholic stimulants, or were for other causes unsuited, were as opportunity presented replaced by better material. As with the men, so with the animals; the ill-assorted collection of bony giants and undersized Sonora 'rats,' whose withers were always a mass of sores and whose hoofs were always broken and out of sorts, were as speedily as possible sold off or transferred to other uses, and in their places we saw trains of animals which in weight, size and build, were of the type which experience had shown to be most appropriate.

"The 'aparejos' or pack-cushions, formerly issued by the quartermaster's department, had been burlesques, and killed more mules than they helped in carrying their loads. Crook insisted upon having each mule provided with an 'aparejo' made especially for him, saying that it was just as ridiculous to expect a mule to carry a burden with an ill-fitting 'aparajeo' as it would be to expect a soldier to march comfortably with a knapsack which did not fit squarely to his back and shoulders. Every article used in these pack trains had to be of the best materials, for the very excellent reason that while out on scout, it was impossible to replace anything broken, and a column might be embarrassed by the failure of a train to arrive with ammunition or rations—therefore, on the score of economy, it was better to have all the very best make in the first place . . .

Wise Old Mules.

"The old mules of a train know their business perfectly well. They need no one to show them where their place is when the evening's 'feed' is to be apportioned on the canvas and in every way deport themselves as sedate, prim, well-behaved members of society, from whom all vestiges of the frivolities of youth have been eradicated. They never wander from the sound of the bell, and give no trouble to the packers 'on herd.'

"But a far different story must be told of the inexperienced, skittish young mule, fresh from the blue grass of Missouri or Nebraska. He is the source of more profanity than he is worth, and were it not that the Recording Angel understands the aggravation in the case, he would have his hands full in entering all the 'cuss words' to which the green pack mule has given rise. He will not mind the bell, will wander away from his comrades on herd and in sundry and divers ways demonstrates the perversity of his nature. To contravene his maliciousness, it is necessary to mark him in such a manner that every packer will see at a glance that he is a new arrival, and thereupon set to work to drive him back to his proper place in his own herd. The most certain, as it is the most convenient way to effect this, is by neatly roaching his mane and shaving his tail so that nothing is left but a pencil or tassel of hair at the extreme end. He is now known as a 'shave-tail' and everybody can recognize him at first sight. His sedate and well-trained comrade is called a 'bell-sharp.'

"These terms, in frontier sarcasm, have been transferred to officers of the army who, in the parlance of the packers, are known as 'bell-sharps' and 'shave-tails,' respectively, the former being the old captain or field officer of many 'fogies,' who knows too much to be wasting his energies in needless excursions about the country, and the latter, the youngster fresh from his studies on the Hudson (at West Point), who fondly imagines he knows it all, and is not above having people know that he does He is a 'shave-tail'—all elegance of uniform, spick-span new, well groomed, and without sense enough to come in for 'feed' when the bell rings . . .

An Animated Sight.

"There are few more animated sights than a pack train at the moment of feeding and grooming the mules. The care shown equals almost that given to the average baby, and the dumb animals seem to respond to all attentions. General Crook kept himself posted as to what was done to every mule, and, as a result, had the satisfaction of seeing his trains carrying a net average of 320 pounds to the mule, while a pamphlet issued by the government had explicitly stated that the highest average should not exceed 175 pounds. So that, viewed in the most sordid light, the care which General Crook bestowed upon his trains yielded wonderful results. Not a day passed that the general did not pass from one to two hours in personal inspection of the workings of his trains, and he has often since told me that he felt then the great responsibility of having his transportation in the most perfect order, because so much was to be demanded of it.

"The packers themselves were an interesting study, drawn as they were from the four corners of the earth, although a majority of them, as was to be expected, were of Spanish-American origin. Not an evening passed on this trip across the mountains of the Mogollon range that Crook did not quietly take a seat close to the camp fire of some of the packers and listen intently to their reminiscences of early mining days in California or 'up on the Frazer in British Columbia.' 'Hank 'n Yank,' Tom Moore, Jim O'Neill, Charlie Hopkins, Jack Long, Long Jim Cook, and others, were 'forty-niners' and well able to discuss the most exciting times known to the new Pactolus, with its accompanying trying days of the vigilance committee and other episodes of equal interest. These were 'men' in the truest sense of the term; they had faced all perils, endured all privations and conquered in a manly way, which is one unfailing test of greatness in human nature."

After his successful campaigns against the Apaches in Arizona, Crook, in 1875, was transferred to the command of the Department of the Platte and the next year, in his expedition against the Sioux and Cheyennes, proved how valuable a well-organized pack train is. After the disaster to Gen. George A. Custer and his Seventh cavalry on June 25, 1876, the forces of General Crook and Gen. Alfred H. Terry, Custer's superior officer, united to pursue the hostiles.

"In two things the column from the Yellowstone (Terry's command) was sadly deficient: in cavalry and in rapid transportation" writes Bourke. "The Seventh cavalry was in need of reorganization, half of its original numbers having been killed or wounded in the affair of the Big Horn; the pack-train, made up, as it necessarily was, of animals taken out of the traces of the heavy wagons, was the saddest burlesque in that direction which it has ever been my lot to witness—for this no blame was ascribable to Terry, who was doing the best he could with the means allowed him in Washington . . . Crook's pack-train was a marvel of system; it maintained a discipline much severer than had been attained by any company in either column; under the indefatigable supervision of Tom Moore, Dave Mears and others, who had had an experience of more than a quarter of a century, our mules moved with a precision to which the worn-out comparison of 'clockwork' is justly adapted. On the first day's march, after meeting Crook, Terry's pack-train dropped, lost or damaged more stores than Crook's command had spoiled from the same causes from the time when the campaign commenced."

But lest this unfavorable comment on the efficiency of the pack-train of a rival outfit be ascribed to the natural prejudice of an officer for his commander whom he admired and respected, as Captain Bourke did General Crook, let it be added that an even severer criticism was uttered by an officer in the Seventh cavalry. He was the late

"Cinching up" a pack mule—from a drawing by Frederic Remington, illustrating "On Frontier Service," by Lieut. G. W. Van Deusen in the Outing Magazine, December, 1895.

Gen. Hugh L. Scott, who as a young lieutenant fresh from West Point (a "shave-tail"), joined the Seventh a few weeks after the disaster to Custer.

Two years later young Scott was stationed with his regiment in the Black Hills when General Sheridan arrived to locate the new post of Fort Meade. In his book "Some Memories of a Soldier" (published by the Century company in 1928) General Scott writes:

Custer's Train a "Disgrace."

"The Seventh cavalry officers all made an official call on General Sheridan in a body in the tent of our colonel (Samuel Sturgis). It was a large hospital tent, but it was so full and my rank so low I could not get entirely inside. Sheridan expatiated upon the value such a post would have, when Indians broke away from the Nebraska agencies and went north toward the camp of Sitting Bull; a telegram to Fort Meade, he said, would enable a cavalry force to head them off here. I took my courage in hand and asked if he thought that post would be any good here without a pack-train. Instead of having me thrown out, it seemed to strike him just right, for he turned to our colonel, saying: 'Sam, do you want a pack-train? I'll give you one.'

"The Seventh cavalry had never had a real pack-train before, because General Terry thought you could catch Indians with a six-mule team, though he never did it himself. Whenever we encountered cavalry from General Crook's department of the Platte, away from our wagons, the difference was painfully evident, for General Crook was the father of the modern aparajo train. Custer's train was a disgrace, improvised from the mules taken from the wagon-train and his packers were without experience. His train was scattered for miles and could easily have been captured had the Indians known about it.

"Notwithstanding frugal quartermaster-generals, the Fort Meade pack-train given us by General Sheridan in 1878 survived even the penurious General Batcheler, who stripped the army of mules, and this train even survived the retrenchment after the Spanish-American war. It was sent to the Mexican border in 1912, when the chief packer called on me at San Antonio, and that train serves the cavalry on the border to this day. I used to love every mule in it, long ago."

Here's New Dignity For Old Chair Set

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

ANY dining room may be made fresh and smart with built-in cupboards, a little paint and inexpensive curtains. But what may be done to bring a set of outmoded chairs up-to-date? The one sketched at the upper right is typical of many that are substantial and sturdy though scarred by long use. All that they need is an up-to-date frock to make them perfectly at home in that modern dining room.

If your chairs do not have the supports shown at the sides of the seat they will be even easier to slip-cover. This cover is of medium blue cotton rep with darker blue for the bias binding and the cotton fringe around the bottom. Large button moulds are covered with the slip cover material for the button-up-the-back opening. If you are not expert at making bound buttonholes, snaps may be used under the buttons. The narrow ties sewn to the corners of the inside of the seat cover hold it neatly in place.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book No. 3 contains six other interesting ways to use slip covers, with step-by-step directions. There are 32 pages of fascinating ideas. Spool shelves; braided rugs; crazypatch quilts; many embroidery designs with numerous stitches illustrated. Ask for Book 3 and enclose 10 cents coin to cover cost. LITTLE THINGS GROW

"Great oaks from little acorns grow" is an appropriate observation in connection with important conferences of two great Iowa agricultural organizations begun in Des Moines last week. The groups are committees of swine producers appointed jointly by the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation and Iowa State Grange. They are beginning work on a program to promote the sale of lard and pork and reduce existing surpluses of these products. A few weeks ago, Governor Wilson took up the cudgel for Iowa swine producers by exerting his influence against the use of lard substitutes in state institutions. He found that non-Iowa vegetable oils had been slowly replacing lard and it was he who originated what has become a state-wide movement in favor of the Iowa produced lard.

STATE CAR MAINTENANCE

Any doubt that the Wilson administration could accomplish appreciable results in reducing the cost of supplying and maintaining automobiles needed in state business through the car dispatcher law, it is pretty well eliminated in a report recently made public. The report was compiled by State Car Dispatcher George Hesalroad and outlines the progress of his department under the first few months of its existence Becaue full and final coordination of departments outside the city of Des Moines presents many organization complexities, state cars used by the highway commission and several state institutions are not as yet completely geared into the car control program Mr Hesalroad's report is as of December 31, 1939 and applies only to offices and departments in Des Moines. The two exceptions noted herein will be brought gradually into the control during the next few weeks.

I-S-A-S

IMPRESSIVE SAVINGS

Conclusions reached by the car dispatcher after an exhaustive and painstaking study of automobile maintenance costs should be of great interest. Maintenance costs as viewed by the state includes a reasonable depreciation based upon a fair valuation. Sixty cars valued at $54,000 have been eliminated since January 1, 1939. Had these remained in service as in the past, depreciation and maintenance, according to the report, would have totaled $41,558.40. Thus an annual expenditure- admittedly unecessary- of $95,558.40 has been eliminated in this one item. As the great fleet of motor vehicles required by the highway commission and state institutions are brought gradually into the program, elimination of an additional 35 to 50 cars is anticipated.

I-S-A-S

The world's largest Swiss cheese factory is in Wisconsin.

MAINTENANCE COSTS

By keeping his finger upon every car in state service; by careful assignment, frequent inspection and impartial stand against promiscuous use, Mr. Hesalroad has reduced depreciation and maintenance to an extremely low level. Watchfulness has gone far to eliminate abuse. Frequent inspection makes trade-ins possible at the most advantageous time. The strict, impartial stand against private and unauthorized use of the cars represents a savings impossible to estimate with any accuracy but which obviously must reach an impressive figure. Two hnndred and sixty cars during the month of December were operated at an average cost of .0265 per mile, including depreciation. The best record was made by the department of agriculture which operated its cars during the period for an estimated .0182 per mile

I-S-A-S

TAG ENDS

How's your gas mileage? . . . highway patrolmen driving under every imaginable road and weather condition, drove 114 patrol cars 302,887 miles during December at an average cost of .0228 cents per mile and 15.6 miles per gallon . . fire trucks in Iowa must carry official license plates although there is no fee . . . the procedure records the presence of such vehicles for use tax purchases . . . current federal debt $42,077,412,040 32 . . . your share $323 67 .

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Care of House Plants.—Keep the temperature of the room in which house plants are grown at 60 to 65 degrees. They do not thrive in a room that is too warm.

Washing Pearl-Handled Knives.—Never allow bone or pearl handled knives to soak in dishwater. Dip the blades into hot, soapy water, then dry them well

Tasty Apple Sauce.—Add one eighth teaspoon of cream of tartar to cinnamon and sugar used on apple sauce. It gives it a delicious flavor.

To remove a stopper from a glass jar, pour warm water into pan and invert jar in it, gradually add warmer water until it is quite hot, but not so hot as to break jar. Leave in water for some time, occasionally trying stopper to see if it is loose.

Wrinkled hands from the family wash can be made smooth by washing in water to which a little vinegar has been added.

For a sweet muffin to serve with hot beverages, try adding a few tablespoons of a cup each of chopped candied orange peel and candied pineapple to your regular muffin recipe. Or try using a fourth of a cup each chopped dates and a third-cup each broken pecans. A third combination is a fourth-cup each of chopped dates and figs.

Common Sense About Constipation

A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with constipation is get at its cause. That way you don't have to endure it first and try to "cure" it afterward—you can avoid having it.

Chances are you won't have to look far for the cause if you eat the super-refined foods most people do. Most likely you don't get enough "bulk"! And "bulk" doesn't mean a lot of food. It means a kind of food that is consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines.

If this is what you lack, try crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. It contains just the "bulk" you need.

Eat All-Bran often, drink plenty of water, and "Join the Regulars." Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

Mother of Misery

Employment, which Galen called "nature's physician," is so essential to human happiness that indolence is just considered the mother of misery.—Robert Burton.

Star Dust

★ All Is Not Welles
★ Ingrid Has Promised
★ A Musician's Needs

By Virginia Vale
(Released by Western Newspaper Union)

PLENTY of bets were won in Hollywood when RKO decided to shelve the first Orson Welles film, "Heart of Darkness." People in Hollywood were against Welles before he arrived there; they didn't like him in advance, and lost few chances to prove it. It was too much for the film colony to have a man demand the world with a pink ribbon tied around it, and get it.

That was practically what Welles did. He insisted on producing, writing, directing and acting in whatever picture he decided to make. RKO agreed.

And after some weeks of trying to get started, and finally postponing the first picture while a second, "Smiler With a Knife," got under way, it was announced that all bets were off, so far as "Heart of Darkness" was concerned The reason given was that the budget for the picture—well over a million dollars—was so high. It cost the company $160,000 to settle things up with Welles and the cast that he had assembled for the filming of the Conrad classic.

And various Hollywoodites are collecting bets made with friends who were sure that the picture would reach the screen.

When Ingrid Bergman arrived recently in New York on her way back to Hollywood to make "Joan of Arc" she made two definite statements to the press. (1) If she becomes famous she will not forget her husband, back in Stockholm. (2) During this stay in the United States she absolutely will not lose her head over American ice cream, as she did the last time she was here.

As a matter of fact, she has already become famous. Contrary to custom, she was introduced to the public in her first American picture, "Intermezzo," without the usual ballyhoo. She saved the picture, despite the fact that Leslie Howard, Edna Best, and two enchanting children were also in the cast—and an enchanting child can give the most experienced actress the toughest kind of opposition.

Miss Bergman should be perfect for "Joan of Arc"; her beauty, talent and sincerity make it fitting that the role should be hers.

ODDS AND ENDS—The boys in Johnny Green's "Johnny Presents" orchestra have discovered a new way of relaxing after rehearsals; they hold a jam session on toy instruments . . . Robert Taylor got the coveted role of the hero of "Waterloo Bridge," opposite Vivian Leigh; it was rumored that Laurence Olivier, the hero of her private life, might get it . . . Greer Garson, instead of Norma Shearer, will do "Pride and Prejudice" . . . So Joan Crawford gets the lead in "Susan and God," for which Miss Garson was scheduled . . . And Miss Shearer will do the film version of the Broadway success, "The World We Make" . . . Three cheers! Walt Disney has finished camera work on "Pinocchio" after two years; it will probably be released late in February.

The aim of many a student musician is to land a job in radio, preferably on a network staff orchestra. It's a 52-week a year job, at a substantial salary, offering a degree of security difficult to find anywhere else in music.

Frankie Masters, who has been conducting dance music on the air for more than a decade, offers his advice to those trying to do it.

"Don't expect to get anywhere just on your ability to play one type of music well on one instrument," he says. "A staff musician's daily work covers a range from swing to symphony, and the musician who can't encompass that range hasn't a chance. And there's a constant demand for men who can play two or more instruments."

Joan Bennett seems to have been the very well dressed bride when she married Walter Wanger, the producer, in Phoenix, Ariz. She wore a beige jersey sports dress and a beaver hat and coat. And for the third time she selected a groom a good bit older than she was.

Until almost the last minute it was generally supposed that she would marry one of New York's young men about town. But that would have meant giving up her career—and when you have young children, it's nice to have a career.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

THE PERILS OF REJECTING CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 21:28-43.
GOLDEN TEXT—I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.—John 14:6.

Fearlessly facing crucifixion within a few days, Jesus stood in the temple, there facing His bitter enemies and replying to their attacks in words such as no man ever spake. He brought them face to face with the very essence of sin, which is the rejection of Christ. Their own words condemned them, but when they should have repented, they became embittered and hardened in their sin. Let no one who reads these lines follow their example, but if the Holy Spirit brings conviction, turn to Him in repentance and faith.

Every Sunday School lesson is of great importance, but possibly no lesson we shall ever have to teach will be as important as this one, for it deals very plainly with the awful peril of rejecting Christ Eternal destiny depends upon the choices made in response to this lesson. Let every one of us study it and teach it with solemn earnestness.

I. Actions Speak Louder Than Words (vv. 28-32).

All church members, who have come into that relationship by smoothly spoken words of acceptance and devotion to Christ which then have not been lived out in the daily walk, may see themselves pictured in the son who courteously and glibly assured his father that he could depend on him, and then promptly went his own way. They will see that they need to repent and substitute real heart-moving and life-changing action for their words, lest the harlots and publicans pass them and go into heaven before them. Professing church member without any evidence of God's power in your life, turn to Him now!

Note the word of encouragement to repentant sinners. Perhaps someone who reads this paragraph has at some time rejected Christ and has since thought that he could not turn back, that it was too late for him to do the thing which his heart tells him to do even though his lips have spoken unkind words of rejection. Friend, consider the one who said, "I will not," but who did his father's will. Come to the Saviour now; you will find Him ready to receive you.

II. Selfish Unbelief Results in Christ-Rejection (vv. 33-41).

This parable clearly relates to the Israelites who had rejected the prophets sent to them by God and who were now about to kill His Son. The heartbreaking story of Israel's unbelief and rejection of Christ and the judgment which has been upon them all the years since then, is not something over which we should gloat, but rather something which should move us to tears and prayer for our Jewish friends. After all, are we any better than they? Are not the appalling majority of Gentiles walking in that same road of selfish unbelief which leads inevitably to the rejection of Christ?

No man or woman can go on selfishly taking the benefits of God, using them for self advantage or comfort, turning a deaf ear to the cries of God's messengers, and hope to have any ultimate result other than Christ-rejection. It is high time that thoughtless people who perhaps have no deliberate intention to be wicked or to turn Christ away, should awaken to the fact that they are doing just that by their manner of living.

III. Rejection of Christ Does Not Defeat God (vv. 42, 43).

At first glance one wonders why Christ at this point turned so abruptly from the figure of the vineyard to that of the cornerstone. "The reason why He leaves for a moment the image of the vineyard, is because of its inadequacy to set forth one important part of the truth which was needful to make the moral complete, namely this, that the malice of the Pharisees should not defeat the purpose of God—that the Son should yet be the heir—that not merely vengeance should be taken, but that He should take it. Now this is distinctly set forth by the rejected stone becoming the head of the corner, on which the builders stumbled and fell, and were broken—on which they were now already stumbling and falling, and which, if they set themselves against it to the end, would fall upon them and crush and destroy them utterly" (Trench).

God was not defeated by the crucifixion of Christ. Christ will not be defeated simply because men reject Him in the world. We who are on His side, we who are the followers of the Lord are on the victorious side. Those who oppose Him and speak ill of His name may appear to be victors for the moment, but the judgment of God is yet to come upon them.

HOLY FAMILY WIN OVER SHAMROCKS FRIDAY NIGHT ON LOCAL FLOOR

Little Shamrocks On The Short End Of 15 To 11 Score

Holy Family High School of Mason City, one of the best parochial school teams in the Middle West, proved to be a little to good for Klemme's Shamrocks last Friday night, and the locals dropped a well-played contest, 35 to 30 The Mason Cityans were the best ball handlers and basket shooters seen on the local court this season, and it is a tribute to Coach Bodge Bowles and his boys that they gave them a tough battle all the way.

The visitors started the fireworks in the first three seconds of play, when Diaz scored a sleeper play from the tip off Barz immediately knotted the count for Klemme, but Mason City again went out in front to take a lead which they never gave up. The score at the end of the first quarter was 10 to 5, but was shaved to 14 to 13 at the half

At the beginning of the second half, Coach Mickey McDonald yanked the reserves, who had failed to hold the first quarter lead and played his best men for the remainder of the game.

They had all they could do to penetrate the local zone defense for enough points to win the game and could not keep the Shamrocks from more than doubling their score of the first half

The entire Klemme team starred, offensively and defensively, with Brinkman and Grosshuesch taking scoring honors with nine and seven points respectively. For Holy Family, DiGregorio and Laughlin tied for high honors with eight points apiece.

The Second Team Game

The visitors second team won a good preliminary game by a score of 15 to 11. Bock and Jacobs each got four points for Klemme, and Chavez and Kloberdens got the same amount for the winners.

DAIRYMEN FARING BETTER THIS YEAR

Iowa farmers are finding cream checks much more satisfactory this winter than a year ago, because of heavier production and better prices, agricultural economists at Iowa State College report. On Jan 1, the farm price for butterfat was 5 cents higher than a year earlier

"Increased consumption has played a major part in bringing about improvement in the dairy situation During much of 1939, increased consumption of fluid milk kept butter production below that of a year earlier despite the heavier milk production," they said.

"Storage stocks of butter were 57 percent smaller in January than a year ago"

Part of the improvement in the dairy prices has been offset somewhat by higher feed costs, however

"Milk production is gradually increasing and a heavy flow is in prospect for the remainder of the feeding season. Some seasonal declines in butter prices can be expected before summer, but the average price for the first half of 1940 will probably remain considerably higher than that of a year earlier."

SHAMROCKS BOW TO SWALEDALE, 29 TO 25, HERE TUESDAY EVENING

The Klemme Shamrocks dropped another game to a good team when they lost to Swaledale here Tuesday night by a count of 29 to 25 Failure to cash in on close-in shots cost the ball game for the local boys, but it was a good game and was well played, especially in the first half The score at the intermission was 14 to 14.

Elmer Eddy, Swaledale's leading man for the season, took scoring honors of the game with five field goals and a free throw for eleven points For Klemme, Grosshuesch got seven, while Zabilka and Stille each gathered in six

Reserve Game

The second team game also went to Swaledale The score was 15 to 6, with Ward, midget star of last year's grade team, accounting for thirteen points. Lemke and R Swalve did all of the Klemme scoring with four and two points respectively.

MEN IN AMERICA 25,000 YEARS

Discovery Of Articles Made By Human Hands Reported In Colo.

WASHINGTON — Two Harvard geologists have concluded that men have lived in North America for nearly 25 000 years

The Smithsonian institution announced Thursday that Dr Kirk Bryan and Louis L. Ray based their conclusion on the discovery of a vast number of articles, obviously fashioned by human hands in northeastern Colorado.

These articles, which were associated with the remains of extinct animals, were excavated by Smithsonian archeologists at a site first opened six years ago.

"It was a hunting camp of primitive Americans who pursued large bison, camel and the mammoth during the summers of the closing years of the last ine age" the Smithsonian said "But hitherto any dating of the remains has been pure guesswork"

The Bravest Deed

"The greatest thing accomplished by any private soldier of all the armies of Europe." Marshal Foch thus described the heroism of Sergt. Alvin C. York in the Argonne on October 8, 1918. Armed with a Springfield rifle and an automatic revolver, he killed 20 Germans, captured Hill No. 223 and compelled the surrender of 132 of the enemy (including a major and three lieutenants) and 35 machine guns. He was awarded the Medal of Honor by the United States government and the Croix de Guerre by General Foch personally.

Dr. Mary Walker

Dr. Mary Walker distinguished herself by gallant and patriotic services during the Civil war. She was commissioned as first lieutenant to serve on the surgical staff of the army during the war and spent four years on the battlefield. At that time the attire of women was much more voluminous than at present and it simplified matters a great deal for Doctor Walker to wear men's clothes. Congress gave her the Congressional Medal of Honor and permission to wear her uniform

Modern Canning

Modern canning developed from the need for preserved foods to supply armies in the field. During the Napoleonic wars so many soldiers died from deficiency diets or slow starvation that the French government offered a reward of 12,0 francs to anyone who could develop an effective method of preserving food. The first canned food was put up in sealed glass jars which were heated in boiling water after they were sealed.

Parrots, Mice Make Circus Out of Radio

Animals Give Headache to Broadcasters, but It's All Good Fun!

By HOWARD NELSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

NEW YORK. — Ordinarily speaking, the European war is more important than a singing mouse.

That was why—without reflection on the vermin's qualifications—the National Broadcasting company recently answered "No" to the following radiogram:

"Still interested in singing mice? A sensational one in Nieuwen, Holland, sings like a canary. A white mouse to boot!"

It's only a few years since radio held its first singing mouse contest. More recently star performers from every available genera and species have been invited to appear, lest mice gain a monopolistic grip on the microphone. Today's list of animal performers reads like the index of WPA's book, "Who's Who at the Zoo." Everything from a boa constrictor to a cuckaburra bird.

Public interest is responsible, which is the same reason municipalities maintain zoos.

A Headache to Radio Men.

But while the animal kingdom fascinates radio fans, behind-the-scenes arrangements have been a succession of violent headaches to broadcasters. The wire and letter correspondence relating to these arrangements look like the legal briefs in a Supreme court suit.

Worry No. 1 is animal temperament. If a beastie comes into the studio minus microphone manners, there ensues petting, coaxing, cajoling and perhaps a merry catch-as-catch can. Production men assigned to such programs have evolved their own technique, learning the language of birds, elephants and lions.

They well remember when Horace the Hippo made her radio debut with a snort from Jinja, Africa. John F. Royal, NBC's vice president in charge of programs, was crossing the Atlantic when he heard from a fellow-passenger how Horace enjoyed the short-wave music from New York. Every time a familiar melody was heard, Horace would move his four tons about the golf course at Jinja, making appreciative grunts. Royal decided to serenade Horace with a special broadcast from Radio City. They chose Jerome Kern's "The Hippopotamus" for this occasion.

She Has an Understudy!

Canary birds are among radio's most seasoned performers. Six years ago one sponsor signed up "Blue Boy," a virtuoso with a repertoire of 300 songs. It was the first bird, according to amateur ornithologists, to sing tunes other than its natural ones. "Blue Boy" was considered so valuable that her sponsor engaged another canary as an understudy.

First heats in a new Olympic canary tournament were broadcast in December from San Francisco, where 100 birds participated. National and international contests are scheduled to follow.

A. A. Schechter, director of NBC special events, once thought a talking parrot contest would be fun for radio fans. When parrot fanciers got wind of the plan their suggestions, warnings, comments and parrot pedigrees poured in en masse. Wrote one Californian: "Our parrot is basking in the sunshine ready, willing and able, sans bronchial and pneumonia germs, to chatter, guzzle, whistle and snap at a cracker. Kindly send prize at once."

Mabel Up and Died.

Final auditions of the talking parrots were presided over by a group of speech authorities. Secretly, Schechter was passing the buck. He didn't want to hear any more parrot talk. He had received letters from Local No. 9 of the New England Association of Parrotcasters and from guys who signed themselves Bob White, R. U. Perroquee, etc.

The New Englanders maintained that "Oscar is the best of the lot," but admitted that "he is most discouraging at times." From Columbus came praises of "Mabel," who was coming along in fine shape until she died unexpectedly. From all points of the compass came: "I've got a parrot . . . I've got a macaw. I've got a talking crow! I've got a warbling pigeon."

Then, at the height of this parrot fever, Schechter wrote to his special events men throughout the network: "Dr. W. Reed Blair, director of the Bronx zoo, has advised us there is decided danger in holding the contest at this time. Tropical parrots are susceptible to bronchial pneumonia, etc., etc. . . . we will, therefore, postpone the contest to the warmer month of May . . ."

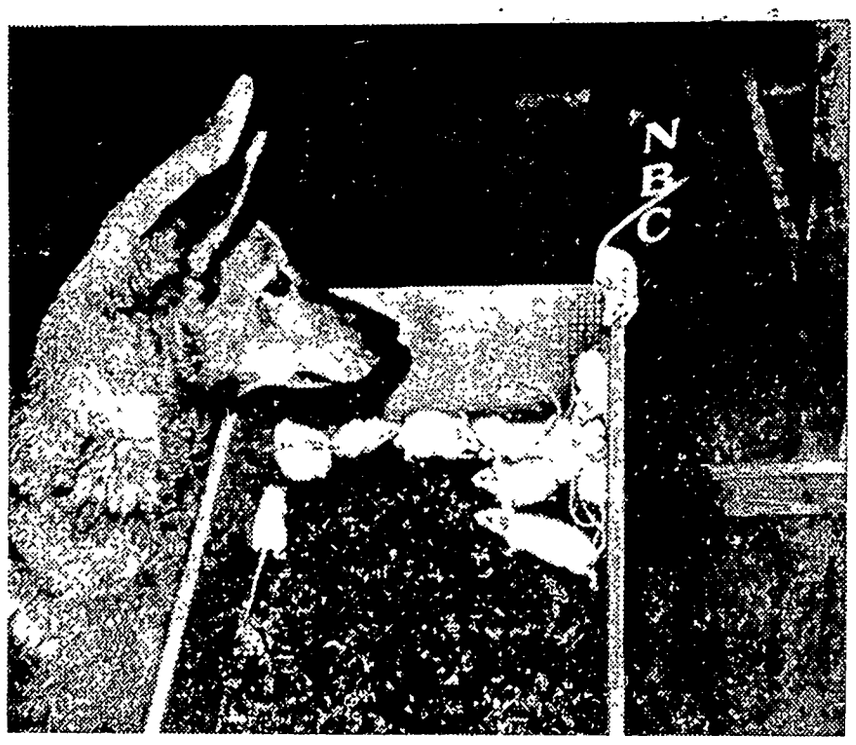
The broadcast actually came off in May, whereafter Schechter declared a holiday for all hands.

Radio Becomes a Circus.

There is considerable speculation about what future radio holds for the animal kingdom. Going down the list of past events, historians already espy programs featuring Clyde Beatty and a cast of African lions; jungle snakes and crocodiles encountered in South America by the Holden expedition; a zoo ship arriving in Boston with specimens of the animal kingdom from Africa; a frog jumping contest; a trout fishing tournament, a word's-eye view of a busy beehive; a debate between turkey gobblers, no holds barred; a whaling expedition in San Francisco harbor, and a convention of crickets on the hearth.

Radio these days is a menagerie, an aquarium, a zoo; in other words, it's a circus!

'Are We Mice or Men, My Friends?'



"GET BACK THERE AND SING!"—In canine language, that's the warning Peggy, mouse singing coach, gives the roaring rodents auditioned for the international contest of vermin virtuosi.

"HERE, TRY THIS"—The announcer gives suspicious squawkers a whiff of the microphone in order to prevent "mike fright" during the talking parrot contest.

U. S. Exposes Air Secrets — But Shhhh!!

WASHINGTON. —American aviation turned an important corner here, authorities agree, with the unprecedented public showing of the United States army air corps' most advanced equipment which hitherto has been shrouded in mystery.

Conceived originally to inform congress of the latest developments of military aviation, the demonstration was so convincing to President Roosevelt that at his instigation it was kept open for three additional days, giving thousands of average citizens a chance to see the results of the close co-operation between the military branch of Uncle Sam's defense forces and the American aircraft supply industries.

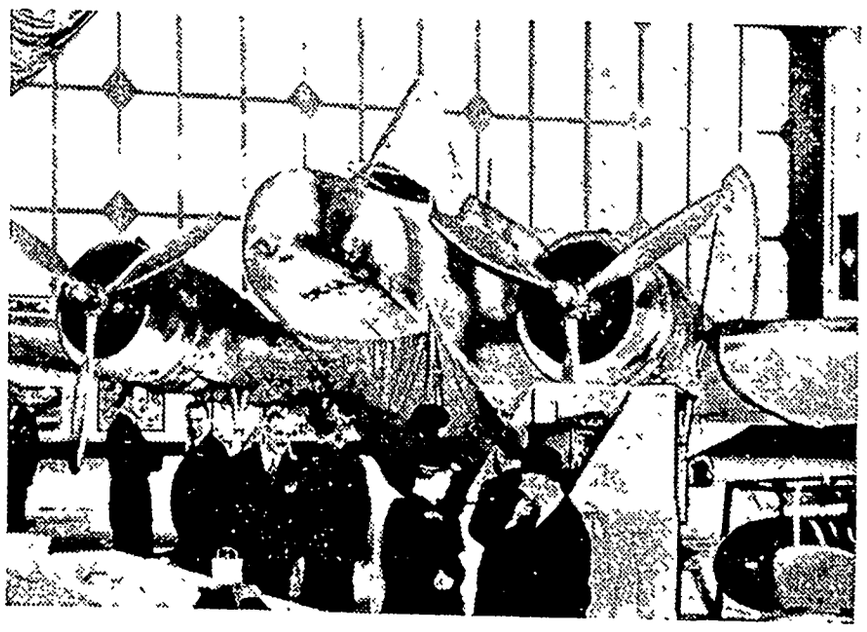
Held at Bolling field near here, the army air exhibit consisted of two feature attractions: a three-quarter-mile lineup of ships in which one or more of each type of plane used in the army was featured; and two hangars jammed with an array of camouflaged pursuit ships and enough aviation instruments and tricky equipment to make a would-be spy deliriously happy, despite shrouds of taped canvas which blanketed certain vital mechanisms.

Show 'Mystery Ship.'

A headliner was the army's "mystery ship," the much-discussed Airacobra interceptor pursuit plane, said to have flown more than 500 m.p.h. in test flights. Nearby was a garish group of weirdly camouflaged pursuits, including the P-39 which has a tricycle landing gear. Some were covered with blobs of dark, dusty green and foggy gray; others were black and dull green, while a flying fortress was a nightmare of shocking pink and weary blue. However, the crazy-quilt patterns served the purpose of blurring outlines and eliminating reflections from wings and other surfaces, officials explained.

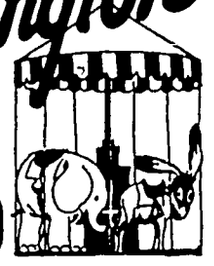
Certain to have a salutory effect on future support for America's military aviation was the evidence of the public's keen interest in understanding many of the features which hitherto have been regarded as intelligible only to most advanced aeronautic engineers. Both government officials and the public took ample time to digest information presented to them in the form of animated displays, charts and cut-out models. Newest methods of testing wing strength and stress and the famous Goodrich de-icer, an ingenious air-and-rubber device which officials said has done more than any other single development to make high-altitude and winter flying safe, were presented.

Aerial photographic equipment, complete with portable developers for fast wartime scouting, was ranged near compact communications units with which headquarters can maintain contact by radio, telephone or telegraph with planes in the air.



ON PARADE—Spectators looking over a standard Douglas bomber B-18X, with special armament equipment, during the army air corps exhibit at Bolling field. New equipment still in the "secrecy" or experimental stage was concealed by tarpaulins. President Roosevelt spent 50 minutes at the field.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round



Mrs. Borah May Write . . . Mrs. Taft Can Speak . . . New Conversations Between Nazis and Soviet Worry Allies.

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT ALLEN

WASHINGTON.—Plans for the future are still uncertain for "Little Borah" as Mrs. William E. Borah, widow of the senator, is affectionately known. Except for one thing—the decision to give up the spacious, beautifully furnished apartment in which she and the senator lived for many years. It was their only home. They had none in Idaho. When they returned there in the summer they lived in a Boise hotel.

The senator left a small estate which, with the $10,000 which widows of members of congress receive, will enable Mrs. Borah to live comfortably. Borah could have made big money, but he always refused. He had many offers of legal cases; and a few years ago he was handed a contract by a newspaper syndicate for $52,000 to write a weekly, 1,200-word article. But he rigidly adhered to the rule that he was an employee of the people and that they were entitled to his full time.

Borah was so meticulous about this that when, during his fourth term, congress increased senatorial pay from $7,500 to $10,000 a year, he refused to accept the additional $2,500 until re-elected.

Mrs. Borah has a sister in Moscow, Idaho, and another in Portland, Ore. She will visit them before deciding where she will settle permanently. In the past, she has had a number of requests to write about Washington and about her many experiences in the official and social world. She has always declined, but now she may turn her gentle wit and charm to such work.

Politicos are much interested in the timing, because it is before the two national nominating conventions. In 1936, Townsend teamed up with Father Coughlin against both Roosevelt and Landon.

War Pessimism.

The confidential war reports received by government agencies have not been too optimistic of late regarding the Allied positions.

This pessimism has nothing to do with the sudden mobilization of the Dutch and Belgians, which had behind it only the fact that the canals which constitute the best defense against Germany were frozen, and the lowland countries suddenly realized how easy it would be for the Nazis to cross.

Chief reason for pessimism is the very mediocre success of the British blockade, plus rumblings of new conversations between Russia and Germany.

How far these new conversations have gone is impossible to say. But they revolve around the Russian failure in Finland and the fact that the Russian transportation system has broken down. This gives the Germans an excellent excuse to become the technical doctors of the Soviet.

In fact, Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop, who has been under a lot of German army criticism for negotiating the Russian pact in the first place, now sees this as a golden opportunity to redeem himself. He has proposed to Stalin that Germany take over Russia's transportation and industry, but only if she has a completely free hand.

Whether Stalin accepts is anyone's guess. But if he does, Russia and Germany together will constitute the most powerful region in the world, ruled by two dictators, stretching from the Rhine to the Pacific.

Nancy Hanks Hears News of Her Son

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union)

AMONG the countless tributes paid to Abraham Lincoln are several, written by newspaper men, which have become Newspaper Classics, i. e., pieces of prose that so caught the public fancy as to result in frequent requests that they be reprinted in the newspaper in which they originally appeared. Outstanding among these is an imaginary conversation between Lincoln's mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, and a personification of the Present.

It was written in 1914 for the Boston Herald by Robert Lincoln O'Brien, at that time editor of the Herald, from 1931 to 1937 chairman of the United States Tariff commission, and now publisher of the Cape Cod Colonial at Hyannis, Mass. It reads as follows:

Nancy Hanks—I see the calendar says it is 1914, nearly a century after my life in the world ended. Pray tell me, spirit of the Present, whether anyone mortal remembers that I ever lived, or knows my place of burial

The Present—Oh, yes. There is a monument over your grave at Pigeon Creek A man named Studebaker of South Bend, Ind., went there in 1879 and spent $1,000 in marking it.

Nancy Hanks — What do you mean? More money than I ever saw in my life spent on my grave, more than sixty years after I had made it! Was he a rich descendant of mine?

The Present—He was no relative of yours. As a matter-of-fact citizen, he thought your grave ought to be marked. Twenty-three years later the state of Indiana erected a massive monument in your honor; 10,000 school children marched in procession when it was dedicated. The governor of the state, now one of the great commonwealths of the Union, was there, while a distinguished general from afar, delivered the principal oration. This monument cost a larger fortune than you ever knew anyone to possess. More people than you ever saw together at one time assembled. And on the pedestal, in raised letters, one may read: "Nancy Hanks Lincoln." Can there be any mistake about that?

Nancy Hanks — What is this wonder of wonders? I realize that my mortal remains, inclosed in a rough pine box, were buried under the trees at Pigeon Creek, and that no minister of religion was there to say even a prayer. I supposed that if anybody in all this earth of yours would be surely forgotten, and soon forgotten, it would be Nancy Hanks, the plain woman of the wilderness. My life was short—of only twenty-five years—and in it I saw little of the great world, and knew little of it, and on going out had little further to expect from it. So, I pray, break to me the meaning of this appalling mystery!

The Present—This is the 12th of February!

Nancy Hanks—That was the birthday of my little boy, a slender, awkward fellow, who used every night to climb a ladder of wooden pins driven into a log, up into a bed of leaves in the loft, and there to dream. Whatever became of that sad little boy? He was not very well when I left him. All that winter he seemed ailing. I hated to go away. I was afraid his father could not give the care that the frail little fellow needed. Did you ever hear what became of my little nine-year-old boy out in the woods of Pigeon Creek?

The Present—Of course I have heard what became of him. Few have not. The people who could answer your question number hundreds of millions today. There is no land and no tongue in which the information you seek could not be supplied, and usually by the "man in the street." Actual millions of people know that the 12th of February was the day you welcomed into your cabin in the frontier wilderness that little boy. His birthday, in twenty-two states of the Union, including the imperial state of New York, has become a legal holiday Most of the others hold some commemorative exercises. When the great financial market of the world opened in London this morning, it was with the knowledge that the United States of America. the great republic over the seas, would record no stock transactions this day. The words "No market — Lincoln's birthday," travel on ocean cables under every sea, and business in the great buildings, forty stories high, of New York city has paused today. So it does at Ft. Dearborn —you remember—on Lake Michigan, now one of the foremost cities of the world.

Nancy Hanks—Pray tell me more of the miracle of my little boy's life. I cannot wait to hear what it all means!

"ANY NEWS DOWN T' TH' VILLAGE, EZRY?"
"WELL, SQUIRE MCLEAN'S GONE T' WASHIN'TON T' SEE MADISON SWORE IN, AN' OL' SPELLMAN TELLS ME THIS BONAPARTE FELLA HAS CAPTURED MOST O' SPAIN. WHAT'S NEW OUT HERE, NEIGHBOR?"
"NUTHIN' A TALL, NUTHIN' A TALL, 'CEPT FER A NEW BABY DOWN T' TOM LINCOLN'S. NUTHIN' EVER HAPPENS OUT HERE."

This cartoon titled "Hardin County, 1809" is also a Newspaper Classic. Drawn by H. T. Webster, it was first printed in 1918 in the Kansas City Star and other newspapers receiving the syndicate service of the Press Publishing company (New York World). Every year since then it has been reprinted in the Star at the request of readers.

The Present—If you had one copy of every book that has been written about him, you would have a larger library than you ever saw in your mortal life. If you had visited every city which has reared his statue, you would be more widely traveled than any person that you ever saw. The journey would take you to several European capitals. Every possible work that he ever wrote, every speech he ever made, every document he ever penned, has been collected, and these have all been printed in sets of books with a fullness such as has been accorded to the works of only a few children of men. You could count on the fingers of two hands, and perhaps of one, the men in all secular history who so vitally appeal to the imagination of mankind today.

Nancy Hanks—And so my little boy came into all this glory in his lifetime!

The Present—Oh, no. He died at fifty-six, as unaware of how the world would eventually regard him as old Christopher Columbus himself. A few months before his death he expected soon to be thrown out of the position he was holding, and so he wrote a letter telling how he should strive to help his successor to carry out the unfinished work. Your little boy saw so little to indicate the place that time has accorded him. His widow was hardly able to get from congress a pension large enough for comfortable support, and yet that same body, in less than a half century, appropriates two million dollars—stop to think of that—for a national monument in his honor, and on plans so elaborate as to call eventually for far more than this sum.

But I could tell you only half the story. Men have retired from business to go into solitude to study his life. Others have been made famous by reason of having known him. I recall a New York financier who had known the high life of the world, mingling with the princes and statesmen of nearly every land. On his seventieth birthday his friends gave him a complimentary dinner. He chatted to them of what he had seen and where he had been. But he dismissed all the honors of the big world by saying that the one thing that remained most worth while in his three-score years and ten was that he had shaken hands and conversed in private audience with your little boy, whom this cosmopolite pictured as "leading the procession of the immortals down the centuries."

Nancy Hanks—This is beyond me. I am lost in mystery and amazement. What did my boy—that earnest, sad little fellow of the woods and streams—do to make men feel this way? How did it all come about?

The Present—That might be as hard for you to understand, without a knowledge of what has taken place in the meantime, as the skyscrapers and the ocean cables and railroad trains that I have spoken about. But I will try to tell you something of what he has done.

Nancy Hanks—I am hanging on your words. I long to hear the story.

The Present—We have in the United States a great democracy. We are making a great experiment for the nations. Your little boy gave friends of democracy, the world over, the largest measure of confidence in its permanency and success of any man that has ever lived.

More than a million people a year now pour into the United States from lands beyond the seas, most of them unfamiliar with our language and our customs and our aims. When we Americans who are older by a few generations go out to meet them we take, as the supreme example of what we mean by our great experiment, the life of Abraham Lincoln. And, when we are ourselves tempted in the mad complexity of our material civilization to disregard the pristine ideals of the republic, we see his gaunt figure standing before us and his outstretched arm pointing to the straighter and simpler path of righteousness For he was a liberator of men in bondage, he was a savior of his country, he was a bright and shining light.

He became President of the United States, but that affords small clue to his real distinction. Few Americans ever refer to him as "President Lincoln." In the idiom of our people, he is Abraham Lincoln, called by the name you gave him in the wilderness gloom. To that name of your choosing no titles that the vain world knows could add anything of honor or distinction. And today, from the Atlantic to the Pacific seas, and in places under distant skies, children will recite in their schools his words, men will gather about banquet boards to refresh their ideals by hearing anew some phase of his wonderful story. Our nation could get along without some of its territory, without millions of its people, without masses of its hoarded wealth, but it would be poor, indeed, were it to wake up on this morning of the Twentieth century without the memory of Abraham Lincoln—one of the really priceless possessions of the republic.

To the list of Newspaper Classics associated with Lincoln's Birthday should be added another. True, it appeared first in a book but it has been "reprinted by request" in the papers so many times that it rates as a Newspaper Classic. It was written by Rosemary and Stephen Vincent Benet and was included in their "A Book of Americans" published by Farrar and Rinehart in 1933. Its subject is:

NANCY HANKS

If Nancy Hanks
Came back as a ghost
Seeking news
Of what she loved most She'd ask first:
"Where's my son?
What happened to Abe?
What's he done?

"Poor little Abe
Left all alone
Except for Tom
Who's a rolling stone:
He was only nine
The year I died.
I remember still
How hard he cried.

"Scraping along
In a little shack
With hardly a shirt
To cover his back
And a prairie wind
To blow him down.
Or pinchin' times
If he went to town.

"You wouldn't know
About my son?
Did he grow tall?
Did he have fun?
Did he learn to read?
Did he get to town?
Do you know his name?
Did he get on?"

Soon after "A Book of Americans" appeared and the reprinting of "Nancy Hanks" began, D. R. Graff, a contributor to Franklin P. Adams' column "The Conning Tower," then appearing in the New York Herald Tribune, wrote this:

REPLY TO THE GHOST OF NANCY HANKS

I remember your son
Whose bony hands
Left a plow to rest
In prairie sands
And came to town
In his Sunday suit
Wearing Tom's hat
And shirt to boot.
He got a job
In a grocer's store
Weighin' out beans
And sweepin' the floor.
Then he bought leather boots
For his awkward feet
And practiced law
In the county seat.
He studied hard
(Almost every night)
Till the pages blurred
Beneath the candle light.
You'd have smiled
In your pioneer way
To see him readin'
About Henry Clay
And hear him talk
In a low-pitched tone
To a bed and a table
In a room, all alone
When he'd think of you
Before goin' to sleep,
He'd pray the Lord
Your soul to keep
And he'd see your face
When the rains'd drip
Through the quiet hours
Of a flatboat trip

"Did he have fun?"
Yes, in his youth
And he'd often laugh
In a way uncouth;
But in later years
When his road was steep
He kept his laughter
Way down deep
"Did he grow tall?"
A good six feet.
With a roomy chest
Where a stout heart beat;
With hairy hands
To grip a plow
And a blacksmith's fists
That c'd stun a cow.
"Did he get on?"—
If what you mean
Is a white frame house
In a yard of green,
Or money to buy
A bottomland farm
Or store-bought clothes
To keep him warm,
Or the extra horse
So he could ride
Along country roads
With his village bride—
Well—
Gettin' on like that Wasn't his way
He didn't gauge success
By the bales of hay,
Or the cords of wood
A man can buy,
Or acres he owns
In wheat or rye.
He didn't care
For wealth in gold
But for wealth in love
That a heart could hold
Your son Abe
Was of different clay.
He'd forget to ask
His rightful pay
As a lawyer should
When he wins a case
And the right prevails
Against the base.
He made his way
By a different road
And his shoulders carried
A heavy load
While cannon belched
And generals led
Gaunt gray troops
Of marching dead,
While fear-crazed boys
Slogged through mud
And cannisters were Flecked with blood
While Sherman rode Through a southern street
And a drummer died
In a field of wheat.
Yes, Abe got on.
Though few can tell
How he ever lived through
The war's black hell
And he died at last
In a President's bed
While the nation mourned
Its departed dead.

So, if you're the ghost
Of Nancy Hanks,
You'll find Abe there
Where armor clanks
And you'll see his face
If you care to look
For his eyes will smile
With a God-like look.

Another poem dedicated to Nancy Hanks which is frequently reprinted was written by Kate McVey Park and first appeared in the Christian Advocate. It is:

MOTHER OF LINCOLN

Mother of Lincoln, in thy lonely sleep
Rest thou content with what thy brief life wrought;
Rest, for no longer need'st thou vainly weep
Bereft of fortune and to sorrow brought
What though strange yearnings filled thy hungering soul
In the blind struggle of those years forlorn;
Fate hath revealed the glory of thy goal,
For what immortal purpose thou wert born;
Rest, though men honor not thy lonely grave,
Content to know no tribute of thine own.
Hand-maid of Destiny, to whom ye gave
Flesh of thy flesh and bone of thine own bone,
Would that thy silent lips could tell us when
This needy earth shall know thy like again!

Shirred Dress With Corselette Waistline

THE corselette waistline is scheduled for much popularity this coming season, probably because it makes you look so beguilingly slim. This simple little dress (8634) with a piquant peasant air about it, has bodice fullness and a rippling skirt, shirred at the top, that look perfectly charming on slender figures. The square neckline is quite deep, the sleeves very round.

This dress will be very pretty made up in bold-figured cottons like percale, calico or gingham for house wear, with rows of ricrac braid. And you'll also like a dress like this for street and informal afternoons, of printed silk or flat crepe.

Pattern No. 8634 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3⅜ yards of 39-inch material without nap; 1 yard binding; 8¼ yards ricrac.

Human Nature

The man who has so little knowledge of human nature as to seek happiness by changing anything but his own dispositions, will waste his life in fruitless efforts, and multiply the griefs which he proposes to remove.—Colton.

FIGHT COLDS

by helping nature build up your cold-fighting resistance

IF you suffer one cold right after another, here's sensational news! Mrs. Elizabeth Vickery writes: "I used to catch colds very easily. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery helped to strengthen me just splendidly. I ate better, had more stamina, and was troubled very little with colds."

This great medicine, formulated by a practicing physician, helps combat colds this way: (1) It stimulates the appetite. (2) It promotes flow of gastric juices. Thus you eat more; your digestion improves; your body gets greater nourishment which helps nature build up your cold-fighting resistance.

So successful has Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery been that over 30,000,000 bottles have already been used. Proof of its remarkable benefits. Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery from your druggist today, or write Dr. Pierce, Dept. N-100, Buffalo, N. Y., for generous free sample. Don't suffer unnecessarily from colds.

THE TRUTH SIMPLY TOLD

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of satisfactory use. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who test the value of Doan's under exacting laboratory conditions. These physicians, too, approve every word of advertising you read, the objective of which is only to recommend Doan's Pills as a good diuretic treatment for disorder of the kidney function and for relief of the pain and worry it causes.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warn of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!

RE-EXAMINATION

Every so often a change in the amount of certain old age assistance checks occur. The average for the past year has been gradually upward When a check is increased little is heard of it. But when one is suddenly reduced the recipent and his friends are often indignant and profess not to understand why. The Federal government permits the granting of assistance only after careful investigation Without the support of Federal funds the state program would be greatly curtailed and the Federal government requires unquestioned proof of need in all cases. Both Federal and state law requires that every case be reopened and reinvestigated every two years Often recipents through their own industry, or through inheritance or other good fortune, improve their economic circumstances to the point that less assistance is needed and an adjustment of the monthly check occurs.

VALENTINE "UNHATCHED"

Remote control phenagling and newspaper crystal-gazing notwithstanding, it appears that the choice of candidates for governor on the Democratic ticket will also be made in Iowa. Senator Clyde L. Herring and other prominent Democratic figures labored in seclusion in Washington, D. C., recently — far away from their associates who only cast votes—and decreed that John K Valentine, U. S. district attorney, would be the nominee whether certain other influential groups of Democrats in Iowa liked it or not. And apparently one group, with State Senator Ed Breen as their acknowledged leader, didn't like it. To become a candidate, Valentine would be forced to resign as U. S. attorney since the recently enacted Hatch law prohibits political activity by Federal employees. When Senator Herring once remarked there could be found a way around the Hatch law in Valentine's case, or words to that effect, Breen promptly coined the Hatch-word of the present argument in dubbing Valentine the "unhatched candidate of Herring's"

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS

In much the same fashion date, location and probably the deliberations of the Democratic national committee will be those of one man without regard for the rank and file of the party The convention is to be held in Chicago at a date to be set by the Democratic national chairman. He need not consult a dummy executive committee nor the committeemen of the several states. National committeemen, delegates and other leaders of the party will do as they are told. While the Republican national committee does not meet until February 16 to set the date and convention site, it is expected it will not depart far from its traditional method of consultation with committee members and state leaders, and the usual date. This difference in method of operation of the two committees was summed up many years ago by Robert Ingersol when he was asked why he was a Republican. He replied, "because it is the only party of free men that ever existed."

ONE FRIEND

I think I'm very fortunate,
Because I have a friend,
I know one person who is true,
On whom I can depend.
If anyone knows all your faults,
And still is loyal, true,
You're blest, indeed, for friends are scarce,
And Fate's been kind to you!
Irene Becker

SCHOOL DAYS

Down on the farm about half past six,
We jump out of bed and feed the chix,
Hurry to the barn to harness old Trix,
"Now," Ma yells, "it's time for Kix."

Then I'm off to school without a stop;
Where in my studies I sometimes flop.
It seems I cannot make the top;
I guess I need a schoolboard Pop

MUSIC HIGHLIGHTS

Music Night will be sometime in the future. The band, girl's glee club, mixed chorus, boy's glee club solists, and beginner's band will be featured on the program.

The Music Mother's Club met on Friday of last week. They have purchased new batons for the baton twirlers.

AROUND K. H. S.

The American History students have completed their study of unit seven, "The Slavery Controversy". It covered four topics: The Orgin of Controversy, Slavery in Politics, The War Between the North and the South, and Reconstruction. Each student wrote his idea of how he would have constructed the South after the War if he had been in power.

The bookkeeping students have finished their study of profit and loss statements, balance sheets, and trial balances.

The senior home economics girls have been studying balance, emphasis, graduation, analogous color schemes, triad color schemes, complementary color schemes, and many other things about pictures. They also learned to distinguish the different types of printing as Roman, Gothic, Old English, and stick letters.

The junior banquet committees have been selected. Allen Barz is the chairman of the room decorations committee, Jackie Kudje is the chairman of the program committee, Ruth Stille is the chairman of the menu committee, Marjorie Lemke is the chairman of the invitation committee, Irene Becker is the chairman of the favors committee, Della Kaduce is the chairman of the nutcup committee, Gertrude Grosshuesch is the chairman of the place card committee, and Shirley Johnson is the chairamn of the committee for table dcorations. Miss Greiner is their class sponsor and is going to help the juniors with it.

Mr. Batchelder was absent Tuesday and Wednesday of last week because of illness.

Mr. Bowles has a large map on the bulletin board in the typing room. The map is entitled, "Environment and Conflict in Europe.

The American literature students will soon be through with, "The House of Seven Gables" by Hawthorne. It is a very interesting book.

PHYSICS

With Mr. Batchelder officiating the ability of the physicists in our class has increased so much that we are surpassed by none. The study of physics has produced much confusion among us though, mainly because so many formulas are based on natural phenomenon and have not derived from axions. Only the other day we questioned the preciseness of a formula. The fact that electrons flow in the opposite direction of the current seems to be a faulty fundamental in the study of electricity. But who are we to dispute the words of such great physicists as Henry and Faraday and many others who have agreed upon these things, thus making it a law of physics.

RECORD AUDIENCE

As a guest of the Iowa Association of Southern California, Governor Wilson will on February 24 address the largest audience ever to face an Iowa governor. The event is the annual picnic at Los Angeles and because this is the first in the history of the event that an incumbent chief executive of the Hawkeye state has been able to be present, the association anticipates an attendance in excess of 100,000. Long known as the state built by Iowans and former Iowans, California notes many former Hawkeyes among its most illustrious men and women; in the movie colony, in public life and in important business affairs. Frank F. Merriam, former governor of California, was once state auditor of Iowa, and as an old-time friend of Governor Wilson's family, will be among many other famous Hawkeyes on the committee which will welcome and entertain Governor Wilson.

Word Pecten Defined

The word pecten is Latin for comb, and is used in zoology for a number of comblike organs of different structure One of these is the comb on the underside of the claw of the middle toe of herons, whippoorwills, night hawks and barn owls. It is used in cleaning and dressing the plumage, and is probably of assistance in removing bird lice.

What Counts

"Darling, if you marry me I'll satisfy your smallest wishes."

"And what do you propose to do about the big ones?"

You Tell Me

Two mind-readers met after an interval of some months. One of them immediately exclaimed in a hearty voice:

"You're all right! How are you?"

Old Lady (to professor) don't see the good of these ture courses in botany. I attended one lecture a while ago, and I remember the names of only plants, the 'Delirium Tremens' and the 'Aurora Borealis.'"

Almost as Bad

The master of the house, exasperated beyond endurance by the cooking, told the cook up before him.

After a long tirade upon her shortcomings, he pointed to the table and said:

"Look at that piece of bacon you served to your mistress," he said, "absolutely uneatable! And this piece of toast I've taken myself isn't much better."

Asked to paraphrase the sentence, "She had a singular mode of address," a boy wrote: "She wore clothes like a spinster."

His Right

"I say, barber," said the customer, who was having a rather rough shave, "have you got another razor?"

"Of course, sir," replied the barber. "Why?"

"I want to defend myself."

Parchment Paper Keeps Fish in Shape in Pan

Broiled fish is difficult to remove from the broiler without breaking—just as it is in a frying pan. A piece of parchment paper cut just the shape of the fish, may be greased and placed under each slice of fish.

It will not be necessary to turn the fish, as it will broil all the way through. Then the parchment may be removed upon serving.

Time Saver

Put snap fasteners on cushion tops instead of sewing openings together. It will save much time. When soiled, unclasp the snaps, slip tops off and launder.

BLONDE CAROLE LANDIS is reporting on the set at the Hal Roach studios these days in a costume of smartly-tailored, abbreviated animal skins, and is praying that some smart Hollywood word-coiner won't give her a suitable label, like "The Prehistoric Peach" or "The Stone Age Siren."

She is playing the role of "Loana, the Golden One" in "1000000 B. C.," the picture of cave man days which Hal Roach is directing and D. W. Griffith is producing.

"I'm studying English, French and Italian," remarked Carole the other day. "And I've studied voice for years. I sang with orchestras before I entered motion pictures. Honest- ly, I can do a few other things be- sides wearing a skimpy fur cos- tume. This pic- ture is a lot of fun and I'm tickled that I got the role. But after it's over I want people to sort of forget that I was the girl in the animal skins."

Carole Landis

She's right. Motion picture his- tory shows that, once an actress ac- quires fame by cavorting around clad in a trick costume, the impres- sion gets about that she'd be lost in something snappy in evening gowns. Take Dorothy Lamour, for instance. Getting out of that sarong in which she became famous on the screen is like extricating one's self from a straitjacket.

Hollywood has laughed at Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, for urging that the motion picture industry be transported bodily to New York. But recently Ernst Lubitsch, who di- rected Garbo in "Ninotchka," and William Dieterle, who directed Marlene Dietrich in "Destry Rides Again," called on the mayor and had a long talk with him. Not long before that, King Vidor, equally well known as a director, had a long visit with him. All insisted that the calls were just social, but it seems likely that there has been some dis- cussion about bringing the movies back where they came from

Rudy Vallee's new air show will make its debut March 7, via the NBC red network, but it has not yet been determined whether it will precede or follow Bing Crosby's "Music Hall." The preceding half hour will be open, as "Good News" will be cut in half by that time, and the sponsor of the "Music Hall" will be the one to make the final decision, since the Vallee program will be backed by the same organization.

Don Kelley, publicity and promo- tion director at Station WLS, Chi- cago, recently sent a "singing tele- gram" to George Biggar, now at WLW, on his birthday. A girl at the telegraph office in Cincinnati sang "Happy Birthday" to Biggar over the wire, and was promptly invited to audition for a radio job.

Famed vaudeville artists of other years, who have practically disap- peared from the American scene be- cause of the onrush of the movies and radio, will be given an oppor- tunity to entertain a greater public than they ever dreamed of. Al Pearce, air-wave master of cere- monies and comedian, has inaugu- rated a policy of presenting to the radio audiences each week a dif- ferent vaudeville personality as a feature of the "Al Pearce and His Gang" broadcast. The guest artist will present his particular specialty as a distinct part of the half-hour program.

Hedy Lamarr, looking very lovely, arrived in New York with her hus- band, Gene Markey, about the time that pleasant news came along about "I Take This Woman," which caused so much news that wasn't pleasant. Spencer Tracy co-starred with her in it, and it was shelved last June, unfinished. Miss Lamarr refused to go on with it, because she wanted more money.

She finally finished the picture—at the old salary—and now that it is satisfactory, rumor reports that she'll get that salary raise.

GOOD CITIZENS AND GOOD NEIGHBORS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 22 15-22, 34-40.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matthew 22 39.

Character is determined by what a man is in his heart, not by the profession of his lips. This is emi- nently true in spiritual matters, for we know that it is not by much testifying, hymn singing, or even by church attendance that a man proves himself to be a Christian. The question is, Is his heart right with God? It is also true in his relation to his country. Patriotism is not a matter of speech-making and flag-waving, but an inward de- votion to the good of the nation. Most assuredly it is also true that being a good neighbor is not some- thing accomplished by smooth talk or the shedding of a few tears; it is a matter of that right attitude toward our neighbor, whether he be the man next door or in China, which results in a sacrificial effort to serve and help him.

I. A Right Attitude Toward God (vv. 21, 37-39).

No man will make any real prog- ress in the direction of being either a good citizen or a good neighbor until he has a right attitude toward God.

The questions which were asked of our Lord, and which brought forth such precious teaching from Him, were not asked in good will nor with a desire to glorify God, but rather to entrap or snare the Lord and thus give occasion for denounc- ing Him. Had the Pharisees, Sad- ducees, and Herodians (the ritual- ists, the rationalists, and politicians of our Lord's day) really known God and Jesus Christ, His Son, their problems of patriotism and neigh- borliness would have been solved in the light of His Word and, what is perhaps even more important, in His spirit.

Is not the crying need of our world today, gone mad as it has with mis- directed and perverted patriotic fer- vor and forgetting all responsibili- ties of good neighborliness, that it should hear and heed the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ?

II. A Right Attitude Toward Gov- ernment (vv 15-22)

The subtle hypocrisy of the ques- tion in verse 17 lay in the fact that these leaders were not interested in knowing the truth, but only wanted to make Jesus out either to be dis- loyal to His own people because He advocated paying tribute, or a traitor to Caesar because He ad- vised rebellion against taxation. They coated their clever bait with unctuous flattery, a device which is still common among those who would mislead God's people. Ob- serve that even though they did not believe what they said, they did speak the truth about the Lord Jesus (v. 16).

His answer is complete, final, and unanswerable. He has that kind of an answer to every honest ques- tion of man. In this case He clearly states that one who lives under an established government, enjoying its protection, using its money in trade, and so forth, is to be loyal to every proper obligation to that govern- ment. God and the things of God must come first, but a right atti- tude toward God will reveal itself in a proper attitude toward govern- ment.

Why does not some nation realize that the answer to destructive polit- ical and social theories is—win the destructive agitator to a living faith in Christ and he will become your strongest force for God and coun- try. The real answer to commu- nism (and every other anti-Ameri- canism) is Christ.

III. A Right Attitude Toward Our Neighbor (vv. 34-40).

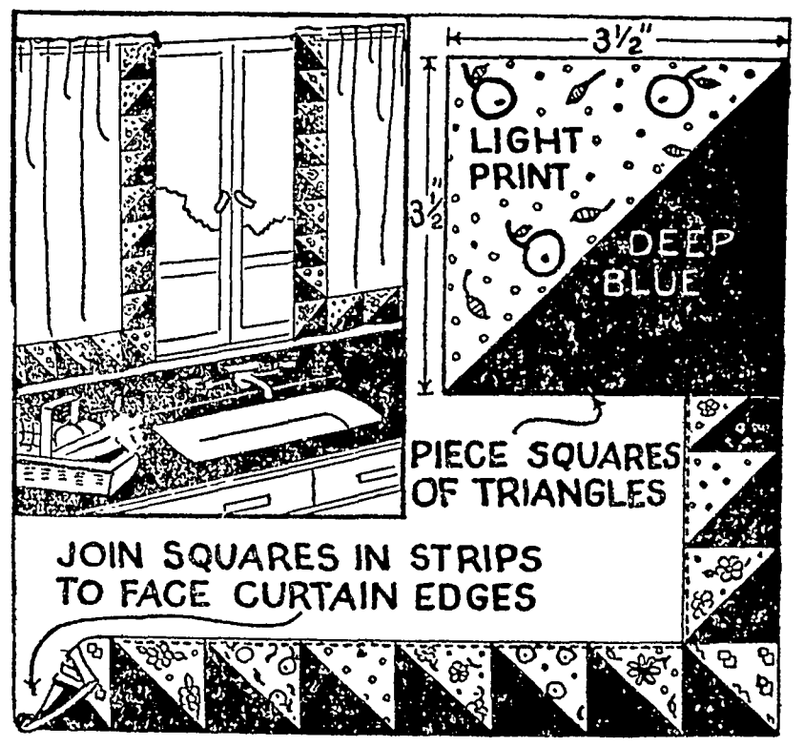
We have talked a good deal of late about being good neighbors, and certainly everyone should do every- thing possible to encourage the good neighbor policy in his own commu- nity and throughout the earth. But why does not the good neighbor pol- icy work? Read the parallel pas- sage in Luke and you will see how man tries to dodge his responsibil- ity. See Luke 10.29 and observe the answer of Jesus in Luke 10: 30-37

A good neighbor is not one who is seeking some kind of "You favor me and I'll favor you" arrangement. He does not see the barriers of race, creed, or color He is ready to help anyone, anywhere, at any cost It is recognized that only the man who loves God with all his heart will be able thus to love his neighbor as himself

The world does not so much need treatises on neighborliness as the winning of men and women to faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thus to a whole-hearted love for God which will inevitably express itself in a love for his neighbor When this comes to pass, we shall have true neighborliness in the world. Let us send the gospel to all na- tions, that they may become first of all good Christians, then good cit- izens, and good neighbors.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



Piece a border for kitchen curtains.

DO YOU remember this old- fashioned Saw Tooth quilt pat- tern? It has been used for the border of many a handsome quilt It is so effective and so simple to piece that it should serve more decorative purposes. Here it trims kitchen curtains of unbleached muslin It surprises one a little to see how modern it looks. Cut a piece of stiff paper in a perfect square and then cut diagonally through the center. One half will make your triangle pattern. The size suggested in the sketch makes a very striking border. If a very strong, bright color is used for the plain triangles, a narrower border in this design will also make a good showing.

NOTE. Mrs. Spears has pre- pared for our readers a set of three Quilt Block Patterns from her favorite Early American de- signs. Included in the set is the Kaleidoscope, and the Whirlwind The third is the Ann Rutledge, which Mrs. Spears sketched from an original in the Rutledge Tav- ern at New Salem, Ill., where Abe Lincoln boarded, and where he courted the proprietor's daughter, according to the romantic legend so familiar to movie goers. It is an unusual variation of the Nine- patch, and rich with historical background. For set of three com- plete patterns, send 10 cents in coin to Mrs. Spears, Drawer 10, Bedford Hills, New York.

Pull the Trigger on Lazy Bowels, and Also Pepsin-ize Stomach!

When constipation brings on acid indi- gestion, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, sour taste, and bad breath, your stomach is probably loaded up with cer- tain undigested food and your bowels don't move. So you need both Pepsin to help break up fast that rich undigested food in your stomach, and Laxative Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels. So be sure your laxative also contains Pepsin. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative, because its Syrup Pepsin helps you gain that won- derful stomach-relief, while the Laxative Senna moves your bowels. Tests prove the power of Pepsin to dissolve those lumps of undigested protein food which may linger in your stomach, to cause belching, gastric acidity and nausea. This is how pepsin- izing your stomach helps relieve it of such distress At the same time this medicine wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your bowels to relieve your constipation So see how much better you feel by taking the laxative that also puts Pepsin to work on that stomach discomfort, too. Even fin- icky children love to taste this pleasant family laxative. Buy Dr. Caldwell's Lax- ative—Senna with Syrup Pepsin at your druggist today!

One pound of loaf sugar is suf- ficient for serving 25 persons.

Garnishes.—Thin slices of lem- ons, oranges, limes or grapefruit, sprinkled with sugar and broiled 10 minutes, make effective and tasty garnishes for roasts or fowls. Red or green jelly, dotted on top of the slices, gives added color and flavor.

When measuring syrups or mo- lasses, dip cup in hot water and mixture will not stick to the sides of the cup.

Cooking Apples.—Apples are over 80 per cent water, thus in cooking them only enough water should be used to prevent them from scorching or sticking to the pan.

New Flannels.—It is an excel- lent plan before washing new flan- nels to soak them for a quarter of an hour in cold water with a good handful of salt. Then wash them in the ordinary way. This makes washing much easier and the articles look beautiful when dry. If new colored goods are al- lowed to stand in salt water and rinsed in the same water, there is no chance of the color running.

Look over dahlia bulbs stored away for the winter. If they seem dry or shriveled sprinkle them with water.

"Research Professor of Economy"

SHE'S not a Ph.D. or an LL.D. She hasn't a diploma or a cap and gown. Her research is not done in the laboratory or the library. As a matter of fact, her findings are made, usually, in the street car, in the subway, in the suburban commuter's train.

She reads the advertisements in this paper with care and considera- tion. They form her research data. By means of them she makes her purchases so that she well deserves the title of "Research Professor of Economy." She discovers item after item, as the years roll on, combin- ing high quality with low.

It is clear to you at once that you . . . and all who make and keep a home . . have the same opportunity. With the help of newspaper advertising you, too, can graduate from the school of indiscriminate buying into the faculty of fastidious purchases!

Early Railroad Station Near Baltimore Closed

The 108-year-old Baltimore & Ohio station agency at Relay, Md., a few miles southwest of Baltimore, has closed its doors. From the day in 1830 that the first station building was erected there until now, Relay has been a landmark in American railroad history.

Standing on a high bank along the Patapsco river, during colonial times its site overlooked the flourishing river port called Elkridge landing, a few miles north of Chesapeake bay. Indeed, until a devastating flood swept the valley in 1868, the river was still navigable from the bay to the landing, and a small tug hauled iron-laden scows over the route several times a week. Meantime, however, the valley began to echo to the sharp toot of locomotive whistles.

Construction of the B. & O., America's first commercial railroad, had been started in Baltimore in 1828 Within two years the rails reached out 13 miles to the famous mills at Ellicott's. Peter Cooper had already run his "Tom Thum" locomotive over the stretch, but the young railroad still put its dependence on the "hay burners"—or horses, and half way of the route it had stables where it put on fresh teams, or "relays." Hence the place became known as Relay and continued to be an important point for interchange of traffic for many years.

During the Civil war period, Relay was a troop concentration camp. Now this historic and beautiful old station no longer echoes to the rumble of baggage trucks, and the click of ticket stamps. Shifting of suburban population has made it more convenient to serve the public at other nearby stations.

Whispering Schoolboys, Here's a Scientific Tip

Dr. J. O. Perrine, who studies such things, believes that the reason why schoolboys aren't often caught whispering is because they don't use the part of the voice which distinguishes one person from another.

"Whisperers can't be recognized on the evidence of sound alone," he said. "If a schoolboy can keep a straight face and not look guilty, he is all set—but you shouldn't tell them that."

To demonstrate, Dr. Perrine used a loud-speaker with four "throats," each of which responded to a different "frequency" — the quality of sound which determines whether it is "high" or "low."

With the high frequency throats turned off, speech or song from phonograph records had a musical quality but was not intelligible.

Eliminating the very highest frequencies alone made a singer lisp. With the low frequencies eliminated, speech was understandable but harsh and unpleasant.

"Few persons realize," Dr. Perrine said, "that such a thing as mere lack of high frequency overtones could make a person unpopular and a failure."

Nevada Millennium

The lion may never lie down with the lamb, but near Boulder City, Nev., according to the Country Home magazine, a coyote and a sheep live together as the best of friends Some time ago, rising waters in Lake Mead, formed by the Boulder dam, created a six acre island on which the coyote and the sheep, a Bighorn, were marooned Although wild-life authorities thought the coyote would make short work of the Bighorn, thus far the two have lived side by side in perfect amity. The coyote subsists on mice and other rodents while the sheep nibbles desert plants.

Spreading Fertilizer

To make use of the waste from his cattle barn as fertilizer a Tennessee farmer collects the waste in a concrete reservoir 10 by 20 feet and 5 feet deep, and then pumps it through 370 feet of two-inch pipe to a hilltop. From there the fertilizer flows on the ground or in wooden troughs to any part of the farm it is desired, says Popular Mechanics. The floors of the dairy farm are regularly flushed clean with water and the waste drains into the reservoir A heavy mesh screen at the pump prevents clogging.

Won His Point.

Arlo Terry, 15 year old Lenox farm youth, and his pony will not be separated. Before long, the Terry family is moving to the state of Washington. They had hinted to Arlo that it would probably be necessary to dispose of the pony. One night recently, while his father was in town, the youth scrawled a "goodbye message" and left home, mounted. After an all night search he was picked up by officials at Bedford and told them that he was going to ride his pony to Washington. He's back home now and happy to know that his pony is going to make the westward journey with the rest of the family.

WILL PRODUCE CORN ALCOHOL AS FUEL

Co-Op Oil Companies Will Support Product For Use As Motor Fuel

AMES, (U.P.)—Commercial production of corn alcohol to be blended with gasoline for motor fuel, long a dream of farm economists, will be undertaken soon by a group of co-operative oil companies in Iowa

The group will form a non-stock corporation to be known as the Power Alcohol Co-operative Association, and will have headquarters at Ames.

It is planned to construct a plant capable of producing 2,500 gallons of alcohol a day from 1,000 bushels of corn The original investment will be about $200,000

The association plans to sell gasoline with a blend of 10 per cent of corn alcohol at a price only slightly, if any, above regular grades of gasoline.

The alcohol would be substituted for all or part of the tetraethyl lead now put in gasoline to avoid motor knocks

Iowa State college experts have been making tests for several years on the practicability of using corn alcohol with gasoline Their experiments now have been virtually concluded and they said that "corn alcohol now is ready to step out of the laboratory onto the highway"

Sponsors of the plan believe it will use up huge surpluses of corn now stored under the federal corn-loan law and create an enormous new field for the use of Iowa's main farm crop.

Unsuccessful efforts have been made in recent Iowa legislative sesions to require the use of corn alcohol in all gasoline sold in the state.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Everybody today has a chip in the political pot. And everybody, through news dispatches, is watching the play of political hands.

But the action is so fast and so widespread that more is needed than a running report. You want explanation of the strategy, disclosure of the forces, understanding of the personalities involved. And you'll find just that in The Washington Merry-Go-Round, by Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, in these columns.

Science Probes Mysteries of Sleep To Find New Cure for Our Troubles

By GEORGE BERNARD
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

SALESMEN and scientists are sitting up nights figuring ways to make us sleep.

They've invented ear plugs, eye shades, V-shaped pillows, silent radios, electric comforters whose warmth can be regulated—and even a gadget called the "lullaphone" whose drowsy hum has you yawning in no time.

The reason is obvious: Physicians and psychologists have examined our nerve-racked civilization and decided that a few good nights' sleep would cure most of the world's troubles.

They've probed the mysteries of hibernation, dreams, nightmares and insomnia. Most important, they've invented a powerful weapon called "frozen sleep" which may provide the cure for neurotic and physical ailments.

Men Must Sleep or Die.

But sleep remains one of the body's greatest mysteries. It is hard to believe that we should surrender our complete consciousness willingly for eight hours every night, yet usually we crawl into bed happily after a hard day's work. We know this is the price we must pay for being one of the "higher" animals.

That is why science is concentrating on methods to induce sleep, both natural and inspired The prime requisite is complete relaxation the moment you jump into bed.

RELAXATION, PLUS!—A fruit vendor along the Amazon in Brazil enjoys his siesta. Between loads he flops in one basket and pulls the other over him.

What the world needs, says Ray Giles, noted writer on sleep, is a dictator who could make it a penal offense to boast about sleeplessness. Most people who wail at breakfast, "I didn't sleep a wink last night," have actually been snoring loudly at the very hour they claim to have been awake.

But if people would brag about how well they sleep, Giles thinks, they would go to bed at night and actually rest better for having decided to do so. A good day's work is also important. Even if you're unemployed you can sleep well if you go to bed saying, honestly: "This was a terrible day and I got nowhere at all. But I did my best. Now for a good night's sleep so that I can do my best tomorrow."

One of the first persons to sleep "raw" was old Benjamin Franklin, but in recent years it's become so popular that in New York 40 per cent of the women and 25 per cent of the men sleep as did Adam and Eve in the garden—stark and comfortably naked. Physicians recommend it because it favors skin ventilation.

Subconscious Mind Won't Sleep.

Experts aren't agreed about dreams. Some maintain there's a morbid and unhealthy feature about them, yet no one has discovered a method of stilling our subconscious mind, which insists on working 25 hours a day. As a matter of fact, many a problem has been solved by people who go to bed at night weighted down with troubles and resolved to "sleep on them." The poet Coleridge awoke one morning and instantly transcribed the poem "Kubla Khan" which his subconscious mind had written during his sleep.

The new "frozen sleep" is probably an adaptation of hibernation or of the ancient Egyptian criminal punishment. Instead of being sentenced to death, law breakers of King Tut's day were put into a state of coma and buried. It was discovered that, although a lengthy burial would tend to shorten their lives, it also cured them of their diseases.

This is because healing processes work faster than destructive germs during sleep.

Russians Hibernate.

Dr. Lawrence W. Smith and Dr. Temple Fay of Temple university had probably heard of human hibernation before they began their epochal frozen sleep experiments several years ago. In the Russian steppes, it is reported, large groups of villagers lie down and permit their bodies to become gradually colder until they enter a state similar to hibernation. They remain that way for weeks, saving food.

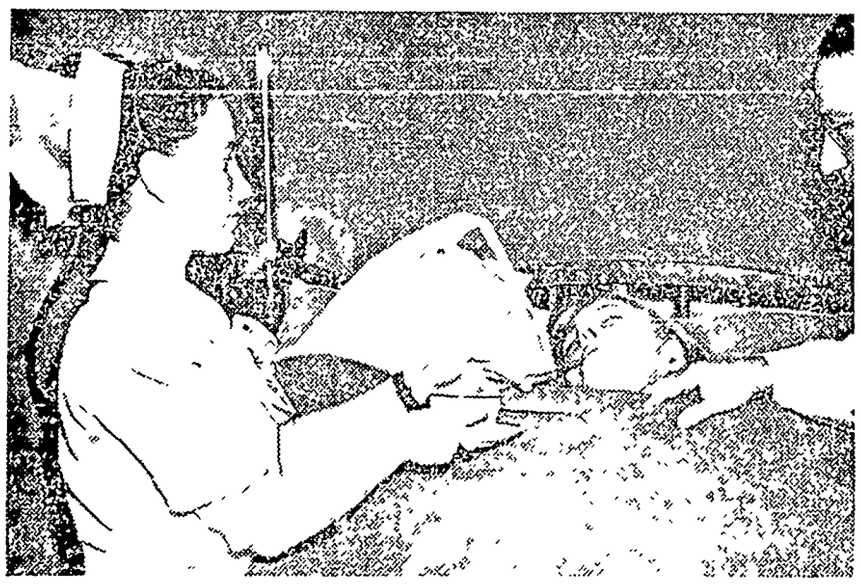
The Smith-Fay experiments were first publicized last year at a St. Louis convention of the American Medical association. With motion pictures, the scientists showed how cancer sufferers—obviously in pain—were put to sleep by lowering the body temperature. After a mild injection of avertin enema, ice was packed about the upper portion of the body much as a fish is packed for shipping. The resultant cooling of the blood stream was much like the experience of one who freezes to death in a snowstorm, a process which is not at all painful.

Body Processes Cease.

After the patients had been put to sleep the room temperatures were lowered. Frozen sleep was maintained for as long as five days but it might be prolonged indefinitely. Pulse beat in the arms and legs disappeared and only an electrocardiograph could detect the quiet and measured strokes of the heart. Kidneys and intestines ceased to function.

The scientists do not claim their treatment will cure cancer, but the tissue of several external tumors was destroyed by the process. Patients invariably awakened to find their pain entirely disappeared. They had no idea how long they had slept. It had been a perfect rest; something doctors are always trying to get for damaged bodies.

Why, scientists now ask, cannot the frozen sleep cure be used to attack tuberculosis and other ailments which require complete relaxation? Will it be useful to replace anesthetic in complicated surgical operations, or to help the patient rest during convalescence?



FROZEN SLEEP—At Weehawken, N. J., a patient is treated with broth after coming out of hibernation. This cancer victim is still wrapped in her freezing blanket after taking the new treatment in which her body temperature was lowered to 91 degrees.

Chimpanzees, Poisonous Snakes Among 'Pets' of Manhattanites

NEW YORK.—If you're looking for common everyday pets like cats and dogs, don't come to Manhattan. In this city of towers you'll find as unique a collection of domesticated animals as ever answered to a master's summons.

J. H. Harper, a movie producer, has as his constant companion a huge Siberian husky which an Alaskan friend sent him two years ago. Harper was broke at the time and the animal brought him so much notoriety that he secured financial backing for a new motion picture venture.

"Tad," the husky, has acclimated himself perfectly to the hustling life of New York, strange though it may be to a dog of his temperament. He used to howl at the moon until Harper began keeping him under the bed. He feared stairs until he once conquered them. Then Tad spent the next hour running up and down.

She Likes Apes!

Mrs. Gertrude Lintz of Brooklyn dates her passion for chimpanzees to the day 20 years ago in Vienna, when she saw youngsters throwing stones at a frightened pair of apes in a zoo. She was so impressed with the way the male tried to shield his trembling mate that she resolved to study them.

"I knew then that there was something within these human-like animals that I must come to understand," she recalls.

Today she has three female chimpanzees in her home. They live like humans, arising early for breakfast, walking through the Lintz estate and taking regular baths. Mrs. Lintz dresses them as she would children. Recently one of the apes, Peggy Ann, behaved better than the average little girl when forced to sit through a banquet and three hours of tedious after-dinner speeches.

It's Snakes With Him.

Harold J. O'Connell, successful New York business man, has snakes as his hobby

"Most people have an aversion to them," he admits, "but this feeling is not inherent. Babies can be given a small snake and they will show no fear whatever. Fear of snakes comes solely through the frightening stories told by mothers, nurse maids and friends about the supposed evil nature of reptiles."

PETS NOW, BUT—Three little lion cubs held in Claire Balson's arms are cute now, but wait until they grow up and start making faces at people!

O'Connell began collecting snakes many years ago, housing them in his home until Mrs. O'Connell's patience finally ended. Then he rented a store building until the neighbors objected. Today they're housed in special quarters at the Staten island zoo, and their sponsor continues his trips to the wilds in search of new specimens. There's still one species he hasn't captured, a viper three times as venomous as any other in this hemisphere. When he catches that, he will feel his life is complete.

Pets Help an Author.

Fannie Hurst, the writer, keeps as her pets a white cat, a terrier and a tiny marmoset. She claims they help her with her work. As a student at the University of Washington she was expelled for refusing to dispose of her devoted terrier. In subsequent years her friends have sent her monkeys, a cockatoo, a Siamese cat and young tigers. She liked all of them, but there are limits to what you can keep in a Manhattan apartment.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT ALLEN

WASHINGTON.—It has already been published that A. F. of L. President Bill Green called upon Roosevelt last week to present a giant birthday cake (which had been crushed en route) plus infantile paralysis checks from A. F. of L. members.

What was not generally known was the fact that while Green and Roosevelt were talking, the President picked up two teletype reports which Steve Early had just placed upon his desk They reported John L. Lewis' hot blast accusing Roosevelt of "not keeping faith" with labor.

. . . as cartoonist Thomas sees it.

"Bill," said Roosevelt, after glancing at the teletype sheets, "it's wonderful to be remembered this way by you and the A. F. of L. I'll be honored to accept the cake and the money the federation is donating to my little crippled friends."

And then he added: "You don't know how much this means to me, coming at this particular time."

Mrs. Roosevelt.

It was a cold wintry day in Washington. There was a nine-inch snow on the ground and the streets were icy. A car stood waiting at the front entrance of the White House.

Mrs Roosevelt emerged from the front door, dressed in a blue woolen suit, with a brown fur about her neck. She glanced at the car, took a deep breath of the wintry air, waved the car away, and set out on foot.

She walked out of the White House grounds, waited for the lights to change, crossed Pennsylvania avenue and proceeded alone along the slippery pavements to make a call, six blocks away.

The guards started after her. "You never can tell about her," said one to the other.

McNutt's Income.

WASHINGTON.—Internal revenue agents are certainly going into Paul McNutt's income tax with a fine-tooth comb. They turned up at American Legion headquarters not long ago and got photostats of the checks which McNutt had received as commander of the American Legion, including expenses and all other payments.

The agents also turned up at the bank where McNutt keeps a safe deposit box, with a subpoena for its contents. To open the box required two keys, one being with the cashier, the other being with McNutt, so the agents were frustrated.

However, one of McNutt's political aides volunteered to get the other key, and it is understood that most of McNutt's personal papers now are in the hands of internal revenue agents.

McNutt has said that he welcomes the inquiry and has no facts to conceal. He also has said that while governor of Indiana he filed no income tax return since state salaries then were not taxable by the federal government.

What federal agents seem to be interested in, however, is other income received by McNutt.

Note—McNutt's income tax investigation started when the treasury probed the income tax of his former secretary, Pleas Greenlee. Since then, the treasury has been using some of the information obtained from Greenlee to probe the taxes of the entire McNutt machine.

And still the presidential candidates come. Latest to toss his hat in the ring is kindly Speaker William Bankhead, who will soon open headquarters in Washington. Ostensibly after the presidential nomination, actually the Alabaman is shooting for second place.

John L. Lewis' Tactics.

John L. Lewis' abandonment of his secret plan to have the United Mine Workers endorse Sen. Burt Wheeler for President was not voluntary.

Strong dissent developed from two quarters. A number of mine leaders objected strenuously, and some of the biggest guns in the C. I. O. served notice that they intended to stick by Roosevelt regardless of anything Lewis did.

Faced with the prospect of a serious split, the scheme was dropped

Mussolini—Look at me. I don't pay any attention to war.

Hitler—I don't know whether to trust you or not.

Mussolini—The feeling is mutual, Adolf.

Hitler—Can't you wait?

Chamberlain — I can; but can YOU?

Stalin—What's worrying me is what those Finns have that I haven't got.

Hitler—They haven't a thing, and it's time you found it out.

Mussolini—Will you all keep quiet, please.

Mussolini—I'm trying to map out a policy.

Hitler—You and I mapped out a policy last summer.

Mussolini—Things are a lot different now.

Hitler—You're telling me!

Hitler—Have you been asleep all through this?

Daladier—Why not; you've done nothing to keep me awake.

Stalin (to Hitler)—Are you going to stand for a crack like that, comrade?

Hitler (wincing)—Don't call me comrade.

Stalin—Listen, you called me comrade first. Have you forgotten?

Hitler—I wish I could!

Francis Bailey and Henry Lee Were Authors of Historic Phrases About Washington Known to All Americans

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

COMES the 22nd of February and we'll be hearing a great deal about the "Father of His Country" and "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen." For those words are almost as familiar to Americans as are the words "George Washington."

How did it happen that George Washington came to be known as the "Father of His Country"?

The obvious answer to that question is, of course, that a new nation, grateful to the man who had led it safely through the dangers of a revolution against its former rulers, naturally looked upon him as its parent and, naturally also, elected him as its first President. But the fact remains that Washington was known by that title at least two years before the struggle for liberty had been won and at least 10 years before he was called to the highest executive office in the land.

But who first gave him that title? Historians are virtually unanimous in giving the honor to a certain Francis Bailey, publisher of a Pennsylvania German almanac in Lancaster, Pa. In 1779 Bailey issued his annual booklet with a frontispiece that was a crude woodcut of a scene in which appeared several symbolic figures. In the upper left hand corner of the drawing was shown Fame as an angel, bearing in one hand a medallion of "Washington" with a laurel wreath upon his head and in the other a trumpet from which comes the words "Des Landes Vater"—"The Father of the Country."

Just how widespread became the use of that title as the result of the publication of this almanac is unknown. But in 1781 it was used again—this time by Count Dumas, an officer in Rochambeau's army of French allies. In that year Washington had gone to Newport, R. I., to confer with General Rochambeau.

They Called Him 'Father.'

When Washington finished his conference with Rochambeau and prepared to return to his headquarters near West Point, the French general appointed Count Dumas to escort the American leader from Newport to Providence. In his memoirs, Count Dumas tells of the incident and records the use of the title "Father of His Country" as follows:

We arrived there at night on March 13. The whole of the population had assembled from the suburbs, we were surrounded by a crowd of children carrying torches, reiterating the acclamations of the citizens, all were eager to approach the person of him whom they called their father, and pressed so closely around us that they hindered us from proceeding. General Washington was much affected, stopped a few moments and, pressing my hand, said: "We may be beaten by the English, it is the chance of war, but behold an army which they can never conquer."

Thus Washington during his lifetime probably heard himself referred to as the "Father of His Country" many times. But it is probable that he never heard that immortal phrase, "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen," for it was not uttered until after his death, which occurred on December 14, 1799. Nearly two weeks later congress assembled to hold a memorial service for the country's lost leader and to Henry Lee of Virginia was given the honor of pronouncing the funeral oration.

Lee's Eulogy.

On December 26, 1799, Lee delivered the oration in congress which, in part, follows:

First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen, he was second to none in the humble and endearing scenes of private life. Pious, just, humane, temperate and sincere; uniform, dignified, and commanding, his example was as edifying to all around him as were the effects of that example lasting.

To his equals he was condescending, to his inferiors kind, and to the object of his affections exemplarily tender. Correct throughout, vice shuddered in his presence, and virtue always felt his fostering hand. The purity of his private character gave effulgence to his public virtues. His last scene comported with the whole tenor of his life. Although in extreme pain, not a sigh not a groan escaped him, and with undisturbed serenity he closed his well-spent life.

Such was the man America has lost! Such was the man for whom our nation mourns.

Methinks I see his august image, and hear, falling from his venerable lips, these deep-sinking words:

"Cease, Sons of America, lamenting our separation. Go on, and confirm by your wisdom the fruits of our joint councils, joint efforts, and common dangers. Reverence religion, diffuse knowledge throughout your land; patronize the arts and sciences; let liberty and order be inseparable companions; control party spirit, the bane of free government; observe good faith to, and peace with all nations; shut up every avenue to foreign influence; contract rather than extend national connection; rely on yourselves only; be American in thought and deed.

"Thus will you give immortality to that union, which was the constant object of my terrestrial labors; thus will you preserve undisturbed to the latest posterity the felicity of a people to me most dear, and thus will you supply (if my happiness is now aught to you) the only vacancy in the round of pure bliss high heaven bestows."

Frontispiece of Francis Bailey's Pennsylvania German almanac, printed in 1779, which made the first known reference to Washington as "The Father of His Country."

Two Claims to Distinction.

Even if Henry Lee had not been the first to utter those historic words, "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen," his name would be deserving of remembrance for two other reasons. He was the brilliant and dashing cavalryman of the Revolution whose fame is perpetuated in the title of "Lighthorse Harry" and he was the father of one of the greatest soldiers in history—Gen. Robert E. Lee, military leader of the "Lost Cause" from 1861 to 1865.

Born in Westmoreland county, Virginia, January 29, 1756, "Lighthorse Harry" was the son of another Henry Lee who had married Miss Lucy Grymes, the "Lowland Beauty" for whom young George Washington had "entertained an unrequited passion." Young Henry Lee was sent to Princeton college in New Jersey for his education and after his graduation there in 1774, he returned to Virginia to take charge of the private affairs of his father who, as a member of the house of burgesses, was engaged at the time in negotiating a treaty with the Indian tribes.

Soon after the outbreak of the Revolution young Henry Lee received an appointment as captain of Virginia cavalry under Col. Theodoric Bland but it was not until September, 1777, that he joined the main Continental army. He soon attracted the notice of his fellow-Virginian, Gen. George Washington, by his skill as a leader of cavalry and he was promoted to the rank of major and placed in command of a separate cavalry corps which, when it was completed, included three companies of horsemen and was known as "Lee's Legion."

As head of the legion, Lee more than justified Washington's faith in him. One of his most daring enterprises was a successful attempt to surprise the British garrison at Paulus Hook, where with the loss of only five men, he captured more than 150 prisoners. Congress promptly voted him a gold medal for this exploit.

He was promoted to lieutenant-colonel and in the autumn of 1780 sent to South Carolina with his legion to join the army there which was being reorganized by Gen. Nathanael Greene after the disastrous battle of Camden. During Greene's famous retreat through North Carolina in February, 1781, it was Lee's legion which covered the rear of the American army and engaged in some lively skirmishing with the dragoons of the hated and feared Col. Banastre Tarleton.

When Greene crossed the Dan into Virginia, he left Lee south of the river to harass the enemy. Although he failed in his attempts to surprise Tarleton, he did defeat a body of 400 Loyalists under Colonel Pyle and at the desperate battle of Guilford Court House he routed Tarleton. Next he accompanied Greene to South Carolina to drive out the British commander, Lord Rawdon, and during this campaign "Lighthorse Harry" proved his skill as a besieger of cities as well as a dashing cavalryman in the field. He captured Fort Watson, Fort Motte and Fort Granby and after a siege of 16 days forced the surrender of Augusta. Lee then rejoined Greene, aided in the siege of Ninety-six and played a very important part in the victory at Eutaw Springs.

Marries His Cousin.

At the close of the campaign "Lighthorse Harry" returned to Virginia where he married a cousin, Matilda Lee, who owned Stratford House where he lived thereafter. In 1786 he was appointed a delegate to congress from Virginia and he remained in that body until the Constitution was adopted. He was a member of the Virginia legislature from 1789 to 1791 when he succeeded Beverly Randolph as governor of Virginia, an office which he held for three years.

In 1794 occurred the famous Whisky rebellion in western Pennsylvania and when President Washington sent Federal troops to suppress the uprising they were under the command of "Lighthorse Harry," who did such a good job of it that the rebels were dispersed without bloodshed. Five years later he was a member of congress and upon him fell the sad duty of pronouncing the funeral oration of his old commander and friend.

Meanwhile, his first wife, by whom he had a son and a daughter, had died and he had married Anne Carter. She bore him two daughters and three sons, one of whom was destined for future fame as the beloved "Marse Robert" of the men in Gray. In 1801 Colonel Lee retired to private life but his declining years were shadowed by financial difficulties which led eventually to his being imprisoned for debt in 1809. During the time he was in prison he wrote his famous "Memoirs of the War in the Southern Department of the United States."

In 1814 he happened to be in Baltimore when a mob attacked the office of the Federalist Republican, which had been opposing the second war with England. In his effort to defend the property of his friend, the editor, Lee received injuries from which he never recovered. He went to the West Indies hoping to find relief in the change of climate but when that failed he started for Virginia. He reached the home of Mrs. Shaw, the daughter of his old friend, General Greene, near St. Mary's, Ga., and there he died on March 25, 1818.

One October day in 1775, His Excellency, Gen. George Washington, commander-in-chief of the Continental army, encamped at Cambridge, Mass., received a letter, written at Providence, R. I., which said:

Sir:
I have taken the freedom to address your excellency in the inclosed poem and entreat your acceptance, though I am not insensible to its inaccuracies. Your being appointed by the Grand Continental Congress, together with the fame of your virtue, excite sensations not easy to suppress. Your generosity, therefore, I presume will pardon the attempt. Wishing your excellence all possible success in the great cause you are so generously engaged in, I am, your excellency, your most obedient, humble servant,
PHYLLIS WHEATLEY.

The poem which was inclosed contained these lines:

Shall I to Washington their praise recite?
Enough thou know'st them in the field of fight,
Thee first in place and honors—we demand
The grace and glory of thy martial land.
Fam'd for thy valor, for thy virtues more,
Hear every tongue thy guardian aid implore!

Presumably the general was too busy with his task of driving the British out of Boston, for her letter remained unanswered for four months.

Then on February 28, 1776, he wrote her as follows:

Miss Phillis:
I thank you most sincerely for your polite notice of me in the elegant lines you inclosed, and however undeserving I may be of such panegyric, the style and manner exhibit striking proof of your poetical talents. In honor of which and as a tribute justly due you I would have published the poem had I not been apprehensive that, while I only meant to give the world this new instance of your genius, I might have incurred the imputation of vanity. This and nothing else determined me not to give it place in public prints.
If you ever come to Cambridge or near headquarters, I shall be happy to see a person so favored by the muses and to whom nature has been so liberal and beneficent in her dispensations. I am, with great respect, your obedient, humble servant,
GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Who was Phyllis Wheatley?

She was one of the most remarkable characters in the early history of the United States. The date or place of her birth is unknown, but when she was seven or eight years old she was dragged more dead than alive from a slave ship in Boston one day in 1761. A Mrs. Susannah Wheatley took pity upon the girl, bought her, gave her the name of Phyllis and made her the special servant of her twins, Nathaniel and Mary.

One day Mary saw the little African girl trying to form letters on the wall with a piece of chalk. So she began teaching her the alphabet and how to form words. The girl's progress was amazing. Sixteen months from that time the slave girl was reading the most difficult passages in the Bible and within six years this prodigy had become so proficient with the English language that she had written a poem.

Her health failed when she was 20 years old, due to the long hours which she had spent in study. So when Nathaniel Wheatley went to England on business in 1773 he took Phyllis with him. London society "took her up."

A London publisher brought out a book of "Poems on Various Subjects, Religious and Moral, by Phyllis Wheatley, Negro Servant of Mr. John Wheatley of Boston in New England." Finally arrangements were made for her to be presented to the king and queen of England.

But before she could enjoy this honor, Phyllis learned that her mistress was ill and she hastened home to attend her. Soon after she reached Boston Mrs. Wheatley died. When Phyllis was 25 she married a man of her own race and bore him three children. But her life thereafter was an unhappy one. Her husband lost all of his property in the Revolution, was imprisoned for debt and was unable to support his family. Her three children were almost continuously ill and apparently she was unable to get any aid from the Wheatleys. She was working in an ordinary boarding house when she died on December 5, 1784, at the age of 31.

Although "Lighthorse Harry" Lee is indisputably the author of the "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen" characterization of George Washington, he must share some of the honor for the thought behind that historic phrase with an African slave girl who, 24 years earlier, had called Washington "first in place and honors."

PAYROLLERS . . . .

In Iowa, and many other states where there has been a decided swing away from new deal government practices, thousands of superflous employees have been removed from the public payrolls. There are now nearly 1,200 fewer jobholders on the payrolls of this state than on January 1, 1939. This has been accomplished only after a careful survey and without the removal of a single needed worker. Hundreds of "made" jobs have been eliminated and the annual state payroll cut by upwards of $1,250,000. While the states have attempted to put their affairs in order, the Federal government seems to have adopted the opposite attitude. There are at this time 844,269 persons on the civilian payroll of the Federal government; 279,000 more than in 1932. The annual payroll of this group is $1,505,723,000 or 16.3 per cent of what the government is spending each year. A recent survey has revealed that present functions of the government could be maintained with 30 per cent fewer employees.

MORE CARS WITHDRAWN . . .

At the close of 1939 George Hesalroad, state car dispatcher, noted in his annaul report that 60 state cars had been eliminated from the fleet maintained by state house departments. The annual saving was estimated at close to $100,000 At that time Mr. Hesalroad pointed out that the full effect of the recently enacted car control law could not be determined because the cars used by the highway commission and certain institutions outside the city of Des Moines had not been geared into the plan. A few days ago Mr. Hesalroad announced that a recent conference with the highway commission had resulted in a conclusion that another 50 cars could be removed from service without the slightest hampering the necessary busines of the commission. This would bring the total state cars taken out of service since a Republican legislature passed the car control act, to 110. The replacement cost and annual upkeep of these cars will reduce costs of state government by an impressive figure. The highway commission at present owns cars, trucks and other vehicles totalling, 1,112.

GET OUT OF DEBT . .

Current new deal speeches intended to distract attention away from the huge Federal debt have lately taken sensational slants and unless the meaning is as obscure as the logic, a new way has been developed to liquidate debt that can well be applied to small private debts. A year or two ago attempts were made to minimize the Federal debt situation by calling attention to the many loans made by governmental agencies which would eventually be recovered. However, a recent report by the treasury as a result of a senate resolution, reveals that borrowers from 31 governmental agencies had defaulted on $1,053-742,488 in principal and interest payments. At a press conference at Hyde Park President Roosevelt, so the newspapers stated, contended that decreases in state, county, city and local indebtness since 1932 has offset the twenty-two billion dollar increase in the national debt. Official reports show that from 1932 to 1939 the total of outstanding securities of state county and other local governments showed a slight increase.

AROUND K. H. S.

If anyone has been wondering why some of the juniors have been wearing such a disgusted look on their faces, they'll know it's because they have been working on another budget for typing

The juniors have finally decided what the junior-senior banquet will be like Each member of the class has his part assigned to him.

The senior home economics girls visited three kitchens in town la.. Friday. They visited Mrs Bock Mrs Grange and Mrs Dulmes The students enjoyed their visits very much They have been studying the many different kinds of furniture Examples of these are Duncan Phyfe, Early American Chippendale, Victorian, Georgian, Hepplewhite, and Sheraton They also studied the different types of homes Examples of these are Dutch Colonial, French, Cape Cod Cottage, Spanish, New England Colonial, Southern colonial and Bungalow. The girls have found pictures of each and are now making booklets of each They plan to study each room in the home and learn how to furnish the rooms and care for the furnishings.

The American literature class has completed the reading of the "House of the Seven Gables", and they are now making reports on interesting points of the story.

Miss Sherwood taught the American literature and senior home economics classes for the past week.

The seniors have been busy picking their motto, flower and colors, but as yet not much has been accomplished.

The freshman class had a party Friday night They all reported a good time, even though the weather was bad. The sophomores also had a skating party.

C. H. BERGLUND

C. H Berglund visited at the Klemme Schools last Friday afternoon He gave the students a very interesting talk and demonstration. Samples of cloth made from spun glass were distributed among the students for their investigation Mr Berglund explained fully how carbon dioxide gas is made into dry ice and how packages are wrapped before being shipped with dry ice. Dry ice has fifteen times the value of ordinary water ice It is frozen at 109.3 degrees below zero. He explained that liquid air is oxygen and used some in his demonstration He told us how tornado winds were formed and how they are operated. The funnel we see in the sky before a tornado is merely cold air coming down to warm air.

In the early hours the London siren sounded. All the hotel guests hurried down to the air-raid shelter in various stages of attire—except one. Five minutes later he strolled into the shelter, boasting, "What on earth's all this fuss about? I stayed behind to dress. Why, I didn't like my first choice of a tie, so I changed it!"

"Fine," said the other guests, "but where are your trousers?"

Cooking for fifty or a hundred is a whole lot different from getting a meal for a family of four or five! In this column next week, Eleanor Howe will give you recipes for serving fifty or a hundred—economical recipes of the sort you like for church suppers or the P. T. A.

"Household Hints," by Eleanor Howe, is just the book you've been wanting. You'll find in it over 300 clever, practical short cuts to successful home making—and it's only 10 cents!

To get your copy of this useful book, now, send 10 cents in coin to "Household Hints," care of Eleanor Howe, 919 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Practical Food Containers

Don't discard your empty flour and salt bags. Wash them in hot soapy water and they will make excellent refrigerator containers for lettuce, parsley, and other raw vegetables that are best kept chilled.

For Cleaner Cups

To remove coffee, tea or chocolate stains from cups rub well with a non-gritty cleansing powder applied with a soft cloth. Rinse in plenty of warm and cold water to remove all traces of the powder.

Star Dust

★ In New York Village
★ True Funny Scenes
★ Silence Preferred

By Virginia Vale

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

DURING the week or so that Hedy Lamarr spent in New York with her husband she proved conclusively that the largest city in the country is a small village at heart. She visited a newspaper office and appeared at night clubs, and people stared and stared and even were guilty of pointing—and these were people, mind you, who patronize night clubs so often that visiting movie stars are just people to them. But Hedy Lamarr Markey was so beautiful that she bowled them over.

Of course, she didn't exactly try to hide her light under a bushel. Night clubs were warned in advance when to expect her. And she even went so far as to wear a diamond on her forehead. Maybe she was rehearsing for the role of Cleopatra. Well, it was good publicity; everybody's all agog to see "I Take This Woman," the next picture in which she will be seen.

She wore glamour-girl clothes—a slinky black evening gown with a peg-top skirt, embroidered in blue and beige paillettes, another evening gown with a long-sleeved, high-necked basque of black satin, the skirt of black satin to the hips, cream colored the rest of the way.

If you think some of those hilariously funny scenes in "The Housekeeper's Daughter," which stars Joan Bennett in the title role, are a bit far-fetched, rest assured that they're not. Even the battle with fireworks for ammunition would be just run of the mill amusement for old-time newspaper men like those portrayed so convincingly by Adolphe Menjou and William Gargan—as anyone who has known such newspaper men will tell you. The picture is so good that it should be on your "must" list; it's so good that memories of it haunted your reporter along about the time that "Gone With the Wind" had been running for a good two hours and still had plenty of time to go.

And, speaking of "Gone With the Wind," if you're old enough to have seen D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" you're going to feel right at home when you see this latest picturization of Civil war scenes. Of course, D. W. couldn't use sound. I wished modern producers couldn't when that soldier's leg was cut off without an anesthetic being used.

But the story of Scarlett O'Hara makes a great picture; don't miss it!

As a rule the only woman involved in the "Sky Blazers" broadcasts is the sound effects girl, Ora Nicolls. While the husky males stand before the mike, Ora, who's a little thing, fires guns, makes a noise like a hefty male sloshing through jungle swamps, and shatters the air with simulated airplane effects. But being the sound effects man is a grand job for a woman, and she loves it. She has her troubles, though; trying desperately to please the director in the matter of firing a gun, she demanded, "How many shots is a 'fusillade'?"

One of the most inspiring sights in radio results when you watch Alec Templeton broadcast for "Alec Templeton Time." Not merely because he plays so beautifully, but because he is so sure of himself. The spirit of fun which faintly curves his lips seems to move all the other performers, lifting the entire program. You realize that he is blind only when he is introduced; the other performers smile broadly, but Templeton doesn't; in his world, a smile means nothing, because it can't be seen.

Another good picture is Metro's "The Shop Around the Corner," with Margaret Sullavan and James Stewart making such a good comedy team that the rather slim story is vastly entertaining.

ODDS AND ENDS—The Pat Reillys of the nation are squawking; a clue read during a "Gang Busters" broadcast identified one Pat Reilly—now they're all being hounded, by amateur as well as professional sleuths.

STEWARDS IN THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 25 14-27.
GOLDEN TEXT—Well done, thou good and faithful servant.—Matthew 25 21.

Christ is coming again! This is the message of Matthew 24 and 25, which is the background for the lesson of today. Here we also learn of the end of the age. To many it seems that the time cannot be long before that great and fateful day breaks upon this chaos which we call civilization. These two chapters contain much important prophetic truth, but in studying our lesson we must limit ourselves to the one fact that when Christ does come again we shall be called to give an account of our stewardship.

Men are prone to think of their life as something accidental. They are here and they seem to have certain abilities and opportunities which they may make use of or not as they choose, and then when the time comes, they expect to leave this world, in which they have sought primarily for pleasure and ease, and go out into eternity without any special responsibility. That theory of life was undoubtedly prepared by the devil and is promoted by him for the purpose of destroying the souls of men

I. Christ Makes Men Stewards of His Goods (vv. 14-18).

All men are stewards, for it is evident that our Lord has given to each one of us ability and opportunity to serve Him. The unbeliever who entirely rejects or ignores His responsibility before God will have to answer for His failure to follow and serve Christ. So will the professing Christian who denies his profession by his works have to answer for his hypocrisy Every true Christian likewise must stand before the judgment seat of Christ and be judged for the work he has done in the flesh

The Lord has committed to each man responsibility according to his ability God is not unreasonable He does not demand that which is beyond our capacity. He gives to each one the amount of His goods which that man is able to make use of, and then it becomes his responsibility to use those goods diligently and faithfully.

II. Christ Will Return for a Stewardship Accounting (v. 19).

Life is far from a meaningless existence without responsibility and ultimate accountability. Christ is coming again, we know not when, but we know that He is coming and that He may come today. What answer will you and I give Him when He asks us to account for the goods He has left in our care?

Well aware are we that there are those who scoff at the thought of Christ's return The Bible told centuries in advance that we should expect such an attitude of unbelief, and it also told why men scoff at this truth, namely, because they are "walking after their own lusts" and are "willingly ignorant" of God's Word (see II Peter 3:3-9).

What a solemn indictment that is! Let us see that it does not apply to us. Let us rather be among those who are "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:13). In preparation for that day let us obey His admonition, "Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:13), that we may not stand ashamed in His presence in that day.

III. Faithfulness Brings Reward, Unfaithfulness Results in Judgment (vv. 20-27).

The man who because of special ability had received five talents had a great opportunity to serve his lord, and he did so with courage and fidelity. So also did the man who because of lesser natural endowments received two talents. Both made the most of their opportunities and were equally faithful, and also received equal rewards. We shall not be judged on the basis of the greatness or the limitation of our opportunities, but rather by the use we make of them. That fact should encourage the one who is by circumstance or calling confined to a limited field, while it should solemnize and stir to greater faithfulness the one who has been given great opportunity. Observe that the reward for doing one's work well is not retirement and a pension, but more work (v. 21).

What about the man with the one talent? Apparently he yielded to the ever-present temptation to be hurt because he did not receive as much as the others (vv. 24-26). Instead of appreciating the kindness of his lord in not burdening him with more goods than he was able to care for, and doing what he could with what he had, he hid the talent in the ground and went about his own business. Such rebellion and carelessness naturally brought forth the reproof of the master and judgment (see vv. 29, 30).

Minerals in Soil Add To Span of Human Life

The average person's life can be lengthened about a dozen years through scientific addition of minerals to the soil, in the opinion of Dr. Charles Northern, research worker.

"Crops grown in poor soil produce poor food products, lacking in minerals and vitamins," Dr. Northern explained. "Our problem was to discover a means of adding this mineral content to the soil."

Discovery of mineral colloids, added to the soil as a fertilizer, has supplied this "missing link," he believes.

Dr. Northern set down several results of his experiments. In Florida, orange groves infested with scale became clean and bore fruit with a greatly increased vitamin content after mineral colloids were added.

Land used for growing potatoes, celery, cabbage and other vegetables was enriched with the minerals. Laboratory tests of the new crops showed twice the mineral content of vegetables grown on adjoining soil.

A dairy used the process on grazing land for cows with the result that a glass of milk contained all the minerals needed for an adult during a day.

"With soil depleted of natural minerals after years of usage, people cannot eat a sufficient quantity of food to supply these necessary items," Dr. Northern declared.

"Farm experts have recognized the problem and have urged rotation of crops, allowing the land to lie idle every third or fourth year, and similar methods.

"But land would have to lie idle for many years to regain the minerals which have been taken from it. The discovery of mineral colloids will mean better crops and a healthier and longer-living nation."

Dr. Northern said 16 mineral elements are indispensable for normal nutrition. Calcium, phosphorus and iron are the most important. He explained that calcium regulates nerve activity, co-ordinates other mineral elements and if it is lacking rickets, bone deformities and bad teeth may develop.

Louis Pasteur Is Called First Citizen of France

Pasteur is a household word today because Louis Pasteur first pasteurized milk.

His studies in fermentation led him to the study of other forms of bacteria. Diseases were ravaging the silk worm farms of France. He conquered them and the industry was restored.

Huxley said Pasteur's work saved France more than the war indemnity she paid to Germany after 1870. When pressed by the emperor to capitalize on it, the noted chemist said: "In France scientists would feel that they had lowered themselves by such procedure."

Because of intense application in his laboratory, Pasteur suffered a paralytic stroke at 46 . . . but he did his greatest work in the 27 years following, when physically but half a man.

Seeing French soldiers dying with gangrene after operations, he gave himself to the study of bacteria in human diseases. The doctors poohpoohed his ideas. They called him an upstart. But antiseptic surgery was born.

Then he turned to hydrophobia. He won again with his serum and the Pasteur institute was established. Death by rabies was reduced to less than 1 per cent. Today there's a Pasteur institute in almost every large city.

"Who's the greatest man France has produced?" asked a Parisian editor. A generation before, Napoleon would have been elected. But the newspaper poll showed Pasteur first; Napoleon far down the list.

"Pasteur saved more lives than the 'man of destiny' destroyed!"

NEARLY FOURTH OF IOWA FARMS HAVE ELECTRICITY

Nearly one-fourth of the farms in Iowa now receive electric service, but this is "only the beginning of rural electrification in Iowa, says E. C. Collier, head of the REA utilization division, Des Moines."

"Nearly 167,000 Iowa farms are still without electric service," Collier declared at the Rural Electrification Conference at Ames "Ways and means for putting electricity on these farms must be found."

"The farmer can use lights in his henhouse to stimulate egg production when prices are highest He needs to keep drinking water for poultry, cattle hogs and horses free from ice in cold weather Automatic devices do this cheaply and without fire hazards."

Stockmen report that home-made lamb and pig brooders, made of a few odd boards and heated by 100 or 200-watt bulb, eliminate many losses from chilling or crowding, Collier said.

FILM TELLS VIVID DRAMA OF IMMORTAL MELODIST

On Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, March 3-4-5, the Avery Theatre presents "Swanee River" the story of Stephen C. Foster, the great American troubadour, filmed in Technicolor. What Robert Burns was to Scotland; Thomas Moore to Ireland, Stephen Foster is to America. His songs embody the very soul of his country and spring inspirationally from its rich earth What American is there who at some time has not hummed, sung or whistled "The Old Folks At Home" (Swanee River), "Old Black Joe", "My Old Kentucky Home", "De Camptown Races", "Jeanne With The Light Brown Hair", "Oh Susanna", or "Ring, Ring De Banjo".

"Swanee River" is said to be a magnificent picture because it combines the immortal melodies of Foster with the romantic drama of his life, so that it is more than a glorious musical cavalcade of one of the most romantic periods in American history.

SHAMROCKS WIN OVER HAYFIELD IN LAST CONF. GAME OF THE SEASON

A spirited second-half rally brought a decisive Seven Eagles Conference victory to the Klemme Shamrocks last Thursday night when they took Hayfield into camp by a count of 43 to 26 on the local floor Except for a four minute lapse of power at the end of the second quarter, the local boys played in top form and turned in the best scoring performance of the season.

The locals started out strong and built up a 10 to 6 lead at the end of the first quarter. They stretched their advantage to eight points early in the second frame, but then things started going amiss and Hayfield turned the tables to lead 20 to 16 at the half.

Coach Bowles' lecture between halves must have been a good one, for the Shamrocks galloped into the lead in the opening minutes of the second half and from then on were unstoppable. Allen Barz and Bill Grosshuesch fairly burned the nets with field goals, collecting totals of sixteen and fifteen points respectively Stille played a bang-up game at center and was good for eight points. Grange and Brinkman manned the guard positions so effectively that Hayfield got but one field goal in the last half Zabilka and Jacobs also action and gave a good account of themselves.

Dewey Sowder, Hayfield center who has averaged around twenty points a game for the season, was held to eleven counters, but this total was good enough to give him scoring honors for his team.

Preliminary Game

The prelimniary game saw Klemme's midget grade team go down to defeat at the hands of the taller Hayfield aggregation by a count of 35 to 9. Lawrence Bock was high scorer for Klemme with six points.

U. S. Guards Its Strategic Resources While 'Haves' Fight With 'Have Nots'

By PETER BECK
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON. — When Adolf Hitler initiated his eighth year as Nazi Reichsfuehrer, he asserted, in threatening the Allies with total war, that this was "a social war between nations, in which the have-nots are fighting the haves for a new division of the world." It was an excuse as old as the first caprice of Mother Nature.

For, scattering generous supplies of mineral and vegetable resources in some spots of the earth and leaving others woefully barren, Nature created a world of "haves" and "have-nots" and war has been going on somewhere ever since.

Against daily reports of the pinch European nations are feeling because of blockades, there stands in relief a more encouraging picture for Uncle Sam.

U. S. Pretty Well Off.

America is self-sustaining to a degree nearly equaling the total of "the six other great powers" in the essentials to "a comfortable standard of living," according to Lieut. Col. H. D. Rogers, chief of the commodities division, office of the assistant secretary of war. These essentials, Colonel Rogers writes in Army ordnance, are: Food, fibers, power, iron and steel, machinery, chemicals, coal and petroleum.

The U. S. has one-third to one-half the world's wealth and does one-half its work, Colonel Rogers says. The average American workman has 13½ horsepower at his command, those of some other countries less than one For this reason he estimates the American workman to be worth two French or Italian workmen, nearly two Germans, or three and one-half Russians.

Inventive genius and industrial science have cured many of America's material deficiencies and are working to cure what few there remain today. The army commodities division, according to Colonel Rogers, now lists only 17 materials as "strategic," a far smaller number than that listed by other nations. These are manganese ore, tin, chrome ore, tungsten, antimony, manila fiber, nickel, quartz crystal, quinine, rubber, silk, mica, mercury, aluminum, coconut-shell char, optical glass and wool.

Plenty of Aluminum.

Not all of these are cause for general alarm. Aluminum, for instance, is perhaps the least "strategic" of all. Maj. G. A. Roush, writing in Military Engineer, states that there is no question of the ability of the reserves to meet even emergency demands.

Some geologists have estimated that a considerable supply of high grade bauxite (ore of aluminum) is still available here as a result of the long-established policy of Aluminum Company of America to conserve its Arkansas deposits for times of emergency. Although the U. S. was completely self-sufficient in bauxite during the World war, the richer Arkansas supplies were heavily drawn upon, causing the company to begin importing increasing amounts, until today more than 60 per cent of its bauxite comes from Dutch Guiana, leaving literally millions of tons of varying grade in Arkansas. However, in any great emergency, no great difficulty is anticipated in policing the ship lane from Dutch Guiana, especially since any American defense program must include defense of the Panama canal.

Manganese Safeguarded.

Even in the case of manganese, which authorities have labeled strategic material No. 1, developments of the last few years have greatly reduced the possible danger of loss of supplies. While it is true that domestic production from the low grade ores which are available in 38 states is not being undertaken on anything like a scale equal to the demands of the American steel industry, the Cuban-American Manganese corporation, an American-financed company, has perfected a flotation process for concentrating Cuban ores, which are similar to many of the American low grade ores.

Most authorities feel that shipments of rubber from the Far East are likely to be regular under almost any conditions that can be visualized at this time. Meanwhile, S. L. Brous, a qualified engineer of the B. F. Goodrich company, writing in India Rubber World, recently stated that with the expenditure of $30,000,000 on a high-speed research program to develop synthetic rubbers the United States could in one year be made independent of foreign supplies of natural rubber.

Nation Makes Optical Glass.

Lammot du Pont, president of E. I. du Pont De Nemours and Company, says that, thanks to American scientists, this country is now producing optical glass second to none, whereas in 1914 we were dependent upon Europe for this vital material needed in the manufacture of various instruments. Science has made us independent today in materials which were strategic in the past, he points out: We now take nitrates from the air; recover potash from our own deposits; make our own dyes through organic chemistry, and produce our own camphor synthetically.

No one can tell how soon other materials will be removed from the strategic list by science. The Texas Mining and Smelting company now has a plant at Laredo, Texas, designed to make more effective use of antimonial ores from nearby Mexico. Constant experiments are being conducted to improve the nation's output of mercury, tungsten and other materials.

One reason for the optimistic belief that science will find ways of supplying our deficiencies in strategic materials is that progress of American civilization makes demands entirely apart from the requirements of defense. To quote Colonel Rogers again, "It is practically impossible to name a raw material which has a strictly military use, and the same can be said of many manufactured articles."

OUR position in agriculture requires a smaller percentage of our population than other nations, leaving the bulk of our workers free to engage in industry.

Railroads to Adopt Automobile To Combat—Yes, Automobile!

CHICAGO.—American railroads, having watched painfully while the automobile sliced a big percentage from their total passenger revenues, have decided to fight this competition with—of all things—automobiles. And the traveling public, which sees merit in both the railroad and auto, nods approvingly.

Effective May 1, a new train-auto service will be inaugurated by 11 leading western railroads in 150 key cities. It works this way:

Vacationists bound for a distant destination can leave the car at home, riding comfortably by train to a key point within easy driving distance. There they can rent a modern five-passenger sedan at a nominal rate, galavant around the surrounding country as much as they like, and return home again by train.

Hugh W Siddall, rail executive in charge of the plan, calls it "the railroads' answer to the prayer of the traveler who likes the mobility of an automobile at certain points, but dislikes driving long intermediated distances "

The train-auto combination is expected to be especially popular with traveling salesmen, who can make advance reservations, be met at the train by a representative with the car, and complete their business in a fully insured and maintained vehicle.

Executives point to the time saving features, maintaining that long-distance travelers can complete the long part of their trip more quickly and comfortably than by automobile.

The system was evolved by an organization headed by Edward O'She and R. H. Rogers of Lincoln, Neb., pioneer automobile operators. Negotiations still are under way with other western roads and it is expected that eventually the auto service will be available in practically every town of 10,000 population or more throughout the West and South.

The cars will look exactly like privately owned autos and will be replaced with new models each year. Five passenger sedans were chosen because they offered maximum carrying capacity for passengers and luggage.

Great Men in Exile: Ex-Polish Leaders Claimed by Oblivion

PARIS.—While Poland's government-in-exile continues its ghost-like existence here, the triumvirate which a few months ago led the Warsaw government has become forgotten in obscurity.

Marshal Edward Smigly-Ridz, the bald-headed, artistic commander-in-chief now lives in isolation on an estate in northern Rumania recalling bitterly how his army of 2,000,000 men collapsed overnight before the Nazi onslaught. Smigly-Ridz has been charged with fleeing Poland while his troops still fought, a rumor which the Germans used to advantage in stamping out the last phases of Polish resistance.

Most of his time the marshal spends walking aimlessly about his palace grounds, finding no comfort even in painting—for he is an artist in his own right.

Josef Beck, the dynamic little foreign minister of Poland-that-was, lives in a swank tuberculosis sanitarium in central Rumania. Less than a year ago the world rocked when he defied Chancellor Hitler; today Beck is an unknown. When his government was forced to flee Poland, Beck rushed to Cernauti, Rumania, and announced its reorganization there. But Rumania quickly put a stop to this violation of its neutrality, and Josef Beck became another private citizen.

Likewise, former President Ignace Moscicki, a kindly, studious old man who left Poland immediately after the war began He resigned shortly after the Nazi conquest to facilitate reorganization of Poland-in-exile at Paris. Ailing, he took treatments in Rumania and was finally permitted to join his wife in Switzerland, where he lives in complete retirement.

Scattered, likewise, are the 304 members of Poland's parliament who cheered Josef Beck's speech last May.

WASHINGTON. — You can rest easy about any new taxes this year. Definitely there won't be any. And that goes too for any boost in the $45,000,000,000 national debt limit so wistfully "suggested" by Secretary Morgenthau.

Democratic and Republican leaders have had a private meeting of minds on both propositions and agreed among themselves to do nothing about either. With a hot national election in the offing, the boys have no stomach for soaking the taxpayer either directly or indirectly and they intend to play it safe by doing nothing.

In the course of their conversation Miss Joseph remarked: "Mickey, why don't you run for the senate?" Mickey said nothing, appeared to be thinking the matter over.

Finally he said: "Uh-huh, maybe you got something there. I have been thinking about that carefully and maybe I will. But first I had better get a secretary, hadn't I? How about you?"

And Miss Joseph, comparing the 19-year-old boy to her 62-year-old mentor, said she was interested.

Governor to Governor.

What the governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina has been the subject of much historic comment. But here was what the ex-governor of North Carolina, wise-cracking O. Max Gardner, said to the governor of Georgia, genial Ed Rivers, when they met in Washington last week.

"Governor," said Max Gardner, "I was turning on my radio the other day when I heard a voice that sounded familiar. So I listened. And then I recognized those powerful tones of yours. If I may say so, Governor, you were stupendous! The greatest organized demagoguery I ever heard! I stood uncovered before you."

The announcement that famed conductor Leopold Stokowski will take an orchestra of young musicians to Latin America on a good-will tour this summer brought a deluge of applications to Miss Margaret Valiant, National Youth administration official, who is organizing the group. One from Hawaii inquired whether it was true that the NYA was planning an "All-American Uke Orchestra." Another from Carl Patterson of Van Buren Ark., home of radio star Bob Burns, said nothing about a bazooka, but applied for a piano-playing job. And Miss Mickie Sweeney, Chicago Negress, asked for a job as a night-club singer.

Henry Wallace was reading a statement in his press conference, warning the country against expecting the war to be a boon to agriculture. He paused, looked at his audience of newsmen, and threw in a figure of speech which he said "would be understood by many reporters, but not by many farmers.

"In this war, agriculture is likely to have a hangover without the spree beforehand."

One of the most powerful factors in inner G. O. P. circles throughout the Middle West is the quiet alliance of Landon and Knox men. The veteran advance-man of a leading circus made this significant observation in a letter to a prominent Republican congressman· "After an extensive trip about the country, my sincere belief is that 1940 will be a Republican year, provided the nominee is sufficiently versed in the psychology of the masses to recognize that the people are tired of showmanship."

Managers of the campaign in behalf of Dewey, Vandenberg and Taft are quietly looking over the presidential primary situation in Nebraska. What is holding them off is the fact that the primary is only advisory, doesn't nail down the delegates. In 1936, Senator Borah carried the state but in the end Landon got the delegates.

Gov. Ernest Gruening says Alaska offers a perfect barometer of U. S. political sentiment. He proposes to substitute Alaska in the old slogan, "As Maine goes, so goes the nation."

Mother—Milton, no more nonsense. Tune in and do your homework.

Milton—Okay, mom, but if I grow up stupid you'll know this was a lousy radio set.

George Washington—"First in Farming," Too

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

A VIRGINIA gentleman dipped his goose-quill pen into an inkpot and began writing a letter. Now and then he would glance up thoughtfully, his eyes sweeping over broad acres fringing the Potomac. He was middle-aged, of commanding physique, with a stern, yet kindly face.

The letter, dated December 12, 1788, said:

"The more I am acquainted with agricultural affairs, the better I am pleased with them, in so much that I can nowhere find so great satisfaction as in those innocent and useful pursuits. Indulging these feelings I am led to reflect how much more delightful to an undebauched mind is the task of making improvements on the earth than all the vainglory that can be acquired from ravaging it."

Thus in the fullness of his years and honors did George Washington write to his English friend, Arthur Young.

Every American is familiar with "Light Horse Harry" Lee's characterization of Washington as "First in War, First in Peace, and First in the Hearts of His Countrymen." Few Americans, perhaps, are aware that Washington laid just claim to another distinction. He was "First in Farming."

Washington was America's first scientific agriculturist. He preached the gospel of soil improvement in season and out; he made original discoveries in crop rotation, seed selection and live stock breeding; he carried on important experiments in the use of fertilizers; he pioneered in the use of farm machinery.

Made Farming Pay.

The Father of his Country was a shrewd and canny farmer. He made agriculture pay. He became the richest man in the United States by reason of his success with the soil. At his death Washington, by his will, disposed of more than 49,000 acres of farm land, including his beloved Mount Vernon as well as far-flung domains in Ohio and elsewhere, which were rented or farmed by his deputies. His landed estate was valued at $530,000, while he had additional buildings, equipment, live stock and other investments worth $220,000. His slaves were not included in this inventory, for he freed them all in his will.

Washington's serious farming career began in 1759, at the age of 27. He had inherited Mount Vernon, married the charming Martha Custis and received a handsome dowry in lands and chattels. For the 16 years he was to devote himself to the land.

Farmer Washington had plenty to contend with, however. The land he inherited was worn out by a century of tobacco growing. Concentration on this single crop year after year, with no rotation and no attempt at fertilization, had seriously impoverished the land. Unlike the farmer of today who can get advice from his county agent, state agricultural college or experiment station on whether his soil is deficient in nitrogen, phosphoric acid or potash and needs commercial fertilizer, Washington had to depend on talks with his neighbors and his reading of farm papers and books on agriculture published in England, whose editors were unfamiliar with problems in Virginia.

He corresponded frequently with Arthur Young, British agricultural scientist and editor of the "Annals of Agriculture." He collected an extensive library of agricultural books including "Horseshoe Husbandry," "A Practical Treatment of Husbandry," "The Farmer's Complete Guide," and "The Gentleman Farmer."

When Washington gleaned a new idea from his reading, he quickly tried to apply it. For instance, he laid out experimental plots on different soils of his own land similar to the plots so familiar today to any farm student. He carried on experiments with fertilizer in a fashion reminiscent of what soil scientists do today.

He had ten small boxes made. These he filled with soil taken from the same part of the field so that it would be uniform in composition. One box served as a check plot. Into the other nine he placed different fertilizers such as cow manure, horse manure, sheep dung, mud from the creek, marl from a gully, black mold, and mud from the bottom of the Potomac river.

He divided each box into three sections, planting wheat, oats and barley. He used exactly the same number of seeds of each grain in each box, and planted the rows exactly the same.

WASHINGTON AT MOUNT VERNON, 1787

Mud from the bottom of the Potomac proved good fertilizer. So he built a special scow and hoisted mud. The cost of obtaining it, however, was too great for the results he got.

Washington gave increasing attention to wheat growing as an alternate to tobacco. He tried various experiments such as steeping his seed in brine and alum to prevent smut. He tried also to protect his grain from the Hessian fly.

In 1763 he entered into an agreement with John Carlyle and Robert Adams of Alexandria to sell them his wheat crop for the next seven years. The price was to be three shillings and nine pence per bushel—or about 91 cents. Considering the difference in purchasing power then and now, Washington was getting the equivalent of at least $1.80 for his grain.

In 1769 he delivered 6,241½ bushels of wheat. Thereafter he ground most of his wheat and sold the flour. He owned three mills, one in western Pennsylvania, a second on Four Mile Run near Alexandria, and a third on the Mount Vernon estate. The flour graded superfine, fine and middlings. We have Washington's own word for it that his flour was as good as any produced in America—and the Father of his Country was no boaster.

In a charmingly written monograph on "George Washington, Citizen and Farmer," Dr. J. Christian Bay, librarian of the John Crerar library of Chicago, recounts some stories of Washington as a farmer and human being. Describing some of the voluminous notes Washington jotted down in his diaries concerning his agricultural experiments, Mr. Bay says:

"Washington's attention was attracted to the old problem of large and small seeds, and he invented a barrel-seeder to spread his seed evenly and effectively. He compared continuously the crops from large and small seeds, and suggested that large potatoes yield better than small ones because, as a rule, produces equal

He Counted Seeds.

"It is curious, also, to think of the Father of his Country sitting in his study carefully counting the number of seeds to the pound. Yet he found that a pound of red clover contains 71,000 seeds; a pound of timothy, 278,000 seeds; while meadow grass gave 844,000 to the pound, likewise a pound of barley numbered 8,925 grains."

The Revolution halted, for a time, Washington's farm career. For six out of eight long years, as commander-in-chief of the Continental army, he did not even set foot on his beloved fields.

Peace in 1783 at last brought him release. He had left Mount Vernon a simple country gentleman. He returned as one of the most famous men in the world. Happy to be home, he threw himself once more into his old occupation. During his army campaigns, his keen observations of agriculture as practiced in New York, New Jersey and other northern colonies, had broadened his outlook. He was more than ever convinced of the desirability of pastures and of live stock for conserving the soil. He was more wide-awake to the need of better tools.

The run-down condition of his soil, however, was a cause of increasing concern. Unfortunately for him fertilizers, as we know them today, were not in existence.

As a soil conservation measure, Washington began to experiment with clover and other grasses. He was prompted to do this at the urging of Noah Webster, newspaper reporter, editor, and famous as the compiler of a dictionary. Webster had expounded his theory that some plants have the power to reach into the air and extract nitrogen fertilizer which their roots fix in the soil.

"Nature," said Webster, "has provided an inexhaustible store of manure which is equally accessible to the rich and poor and which may be collected and applied to land with very little labor and expense. This store is in the atmosphere, and the process by which the fertilizing substance may be obtained is vegetation."

Washington tried every kind of legume known to Virginia farmers, and imported many kinds of seeds from England. In this way he introduced timothy to his countrymen. He early discovered that clover and peas had a soil enriching power. In an English journal he read about a new legume—alfalfa—which had been brought from Switzerland. He found that alfalfa, too, could enrich the soil, but it never proved profitable for him.

Even while serving as President from 1789 to 1797, Washington found some time to keep an eye on his farming operations. He had extensive experiments conducted in grain and live stock breeding. He imported new strains of wheat from South Africa and Siberia, neither of which proved as good as his Virginia grain.

Rotation of Crops.

Washington drew up elaborate plans for rotation of crops on his different farms. Not content with one plan, he often drew up several alternatives. He calculated the probable financial return from each, allowing for the cost of seed, tillage and other expenses.

He was constantly on the alert for better methods of threshing grain than the age-old practice of treading and flailing. He read in an English farm journal about a threshing machine invented by a man named Winlaw. In 1790 he had observed the operation of Baron Poelnitz's mill near New York city, based on the Winlaw model. This mill was operated by two men and threshed about two bushels of wheat per hour.

In 1797, two years before his death, Washington built a thresher, himself, on plans evolved by William Booker, who came to Mount Vernon and directed the construction. In April, 1798, Washington wrote Booker:

"The machine by no means answered your expectations or mine."

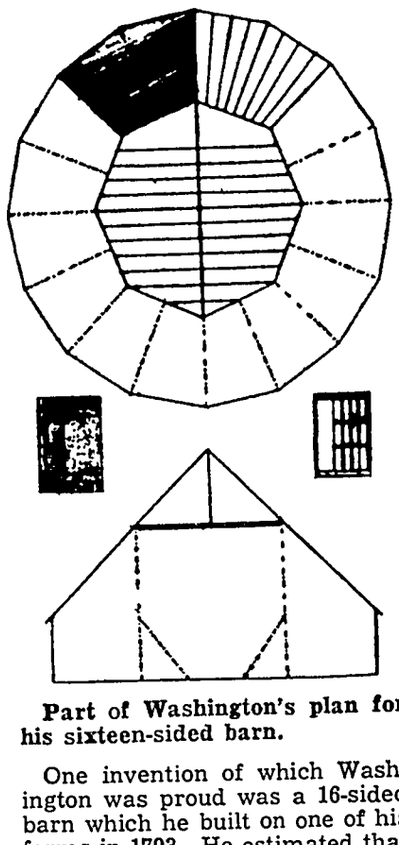
At first it threshed about 50 bushels a day, then fell to fewer than 25, and finally broke down completely, although it had used up two belts costing between $40 and $50.

"Washington was essentially America's first conservationist," an official of the Middle West Soil Improvement committee pointed out recently.

"The Father of his Country realized that man owes a duty to the future as well as the present welfare of his soil," he said. "Washington's primitive attempts to put back into the soil the fertility that had been depleted by constant croppings are testimony of this characteristic."

As a public man, Washington was eager to improve the lot of agriculture. In his last message to congress he recommended the establishment of a "Board of Agriculture to collect and diffuse information, and by premiums and small pecuniary aids to encourage and assist a spirit of discovery and improvement."

But nearly a century passed before anything so important was done by the federal government to promote the development of agriculture.



Part of Washington's plan for his sixteen-sided barn.

One invention of which Washington was proud was a 16-sided barn which he built on one of his farms in 1793. He estimated that 140,000 bricks would be required for the structure. These were made and fired on the estate. The barn was especially notable for a threshing floor 30 feet square. An ingenious method of separating the grain and straw was provided by interstices of one and one-half inches between the floor boards. Thus when the grain was trodden by horses or beat out with flails, the kernels fell through to the floor below.

This floor was to furnish an illustration of what Washington called "the almost impossibility of putting the overseers of this country out of the track they have been accustomed to walk in.

"I have one of the most convenient barns in this or perhaps any other country, where thirty hands may, with great ease, be employed in threshing," he wrote a friend. "Half of the wheat of the farm was actually stowed in this barn in the straw, by my order, for threshing. Notwithstanding, when I came home about the middle of September, I found a treading yard not thirty feet from the barn door, the wheat again brought out of the barn and horses treading it out in an open exposure, liable to the vicissitudes of the weather."

What Washington said to the overseer on this occasion has not been recorded for posterity. But it is a safe bet that the man remembered it for the rest of his days.

The Father of his Country is often pictured as a man without a sense of humor. Yet in the midst of sober agricultural experiments, he gave the following advice on how to keep warm all winter by the aid of a single piece of wood. The story is told by Mr. Bay:

The seed house at Mount Vernon.

"Select a suitable piece of wood, rush upstairs as fast as you can, open a window, throw out the wood. Rush downstairs into the yard and seize the wood again. Rush upstairs once more, throw out the wood a second time. Rush downstairs and get it and continue in this manner until you are warm. Repeat this process as often as necessary."

He concluded this piece of advice with the words: "Probatum Est."

But it is as a prophetic contributor to the knowledge of soil conservation that he will be best remembered in his career as a farmer.

"It must be obvious to every man who considers the agriculture of this country," Washington wrote in 1796, "and compares the produce of our lands with those of other countries, no ways superior to them in natural fertility, how miserably defective we are in the management of them; and that if we do not fall on a better mode of treating them, how ruinous it will prove to the landed interest.

"Age will not produce a systematic change without public attention and encouragement; but a few years more of sterility will drive the inhabitants of the Atlantic states westwardly for support; whereas if they were taught how to improve the old instead of going in pursuit of new and productive soil, they would make those acres which now scarcely yield them anything, turn out beneficial to themselves—and to the community generally—by the influx of wealth resulting therefrom."

Globe-Circling Birds Utilizing Waste Heat A Powerful Fuel

Ornithologists and seamen have good reasons to believe that most albatrosses fly around the world several times during the course of their lives. Incidentally, these great birds, which can be buffeted for days by ocean gales, become very seasick when standing on the deck of a moving ship.

In a new South Dakota flour mill, the heat generated by friction in the grinding machine is so great that the heated air it creates, drawn off by a fan and washed, is sufficient to heat the entire six-story building, except in very cold weather.

A number of American lawyers not only handle the legal affairs of their clients, but are also requested to take charge of such personal details as buying and furnishing homes, advising on marriage partners, paying bills and even selecting servants.

Water And Fire.

Usually water is used to put out fires but in the Ace Cafe at Sanburn the other day it helped to start a fire. ANNOUNCEMENTS . . .

All state officers of the present administration have now announced their candidacies for re-election. Governor Wilson's announcement was followed a day later by that of Lieut. Gov. B. B. Hickenlooper of Cedar Rapids. The governor's announcement met with favorable comment relative to his economy program under which 1,200 state jobs have been entirely eliminated with a savings of upward of $1,300,000 per year. Governor Wilson himself has made little effort to boast of the economy record, letting it speak for itself. He has told several audiences it would have been easier to create jobs for the thousands who have asked for them In one address, he pointed out that similar economy records have been chalked up in many other states which went Republican in 1938 The records stand as a tribute to party sincerity throughout the nation and are in direct contrast with the New Deal record made by the federal administration.

RHODES . . . .

Upon the governor's return, he will be faced with one of the most difficult problems which fall upon chief executives. He must decide whether Walter H Rhodes, Iowa City wife-slayer, shall hang or be imprisoned for life His sentence to hang has been through the courts and upheld The law says that the governor "shall" set the date of the hanging, but the constitution gives him the power to commute the death sentence So, in the case of the inevitable appeal he must decide the question of life or death.

CLEANING . . .

And the doors of the governor's office were closed for the first time during the Wilson administration, the day he left. The custodian's force reports it is a virtual necessity for each governor to get away for about a week or more during the term, in order that his offices can be "mussed up to be cleaned up" They started their job the day the governor left, and it will include the "biennial" wall washing. Drapes were sent to the cleaners.

Star Dust

★ Music of Our Land
★ Needed Mother's Touch
★ Eying Screen Nurses

By Virginia Vale

(Released by Western Newspaper Union)

THE new radio program sponsored by Westinghouse is one of the most interesting and significant on the air. It is broadcast from Pittsburgh every Thursday from 8.00 to 8:30 p. m , Eastern standard time, on 97 stations of NBC's blue network It is beamed to Europe, South America and other foreign lands.

Its aim is an important one. When Kenneth Watt, who produces and directs it, was asked to make up "Musical Americana," he had three things to remember. Primarily, he was to give American music to his audiences He was to try to please all musical tastes, to win over those who look down on popular music, and inspire a sharper appreciation of serious music in those who think they can't understand it. And he was to give young American musicians a chance.

So, on "Musical Americana," Deems Taylor is commentator. Raymond Paige conducts the orchestra of 102 men, from the Pittsburgh Symphony; it is the largest orchestra on any sponsored broadcast. And each week a solo musician of exceptional talent is featured. The principal music schools of the country have been asked to recommend their star graduate students for these appearances.

Deems Taylor, Raymond Paige and Kenneth Watt are top men in their fields; Westinghouse has spared neither time nor effort to give us a superb program, made up of the music of our own country. Thursday should be "Musical Americana night" in all our homes.

"Musical Americana" may play no small part in international relationships. Mr. Edward C. Johnston of New York feels that it is tremendously significant that the program is broadcast to South America in Portuguese and Spanish. When you hear the American announcer speaking, in South America a native announcer speaks at the same time, the American announcement being cut off for those few moments. Mr. Johnston feels that a cultural exchange between the two countries aids greatly in developing the mutual understanding which is so desirable.

Stuart Erwin's mother cut his hair for the first time in 25 years just the other day. Erwin started work as the milkman in Sol Lesser's "Our Town." He plays the milkman.

"I want you with a home-made haircut," Director Sam Wood told him. "You know, one of those ragged mush bowl ones."

So Stuart Erwin went home and talked it over with his mother. She whipped out a pair of scissors, put a towel around his neck, and went to work.

The trained nurses of America have felt that some Hollywood producers had a lot to learn about nurses, judging by some of the pictures in which they have appeared. So they formed a committee to judge all moving pictures having nurse roles. The first picture to win their approval is RKO's "Vigil in the Night"; Carole Lombard and Anne Shirley are the actresses, who, according to the American Nurses' association, really look and behave as they ought to.

Do you want to take a free trip to New York? Every week about 3,000 people who do, write to Dave Elman, of "Hobby Lobby," and about 3,000 more write to "We the People " If you believe that you'd fit into either of those broadcasts, here's your chance.

During 1939 Elman brought some 250 people to New York, an average of five for each "Hobby Lobby" program. An average of $150 was spent on each guest.

ODDS AND ENDS—Hugh Herbert will play six roles in Universal's "La Conga Nights"—he will play himself, four sisters and a mother . . . Elvia Allman and Blanche Stewart, whom you've heard as "Brenda" and "Cobina" on Bob Hope's radio show, have been signed by Paramount for "Night at Earl Carroll's" . . Phyllis Newman, five, who recently appeared on a Major Bowes Amateur Hour, now has a part in "The Goldbergs."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

IN THE UPPER ROOM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 26:17-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—This do in remembrance of me.—I Corinthians 11 24.

Men sometimes stand at the crossroads of destiny quite unaware of how much hinges upon their choices and actions. One wonders whether the disciples realized that as the Passover drew to its end and the great memorial feast of the new covenant was established, they were witnessing the end of the old and the beginning of the new. It is certain that Jesus did realize the high import of that hour. He knew He was about to go to the cross, toward which the Passover had pointed throughout the centuries and back to which cross we in the Lord's Supper continue to point as we remember His death until He comes.

We are indeed on holy ground as we go with Him then as He meets His disciples alone in that upper room for a time of fellowship with them as He observes

I. The Last Passover (vv. 17-20).

"Here we see the perfecting and the passing of the old economy and the beginning of the new. The Passover was observed, the feast of deliverance from slavery, the feast of the exodus, the feast of hope. Men had kept it fitfully through the long centuries, regularly at first and then occasionally through the age of decadence. The King sat down to keep it as one of the nation and the people That was its last keeping in the economy of God, because all that it had foreshadowed was fulfilled as He sat at the board, and all that it had pointed to found the ultimate fulfillment in Him. He completed that of which the exodus had but been the preparation. The final exodus came by the way of that cross to which He was going" (Dr. G. Campbell Morgan).

II. The Betrayal Predicted (vv. 21-25).

What precious fellowship the twelve and their Lord must have had around that table in the upper room as they celebrated the great feast of their people. Think what a shock came to them as in the midst of this fellowship Jesus quietly and solemnly made the astonishing prediction, "Verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me."

Their joy was changed to exceedingly great sorrow as they asked, "Lord, is it I?" Apparently Judas had maintained such outward conduct as to turn no suspicion in his direction, even though all along he had in his heart the blackest of treachery against his Lord. It is a sad and soul-searching fact which is here revealed, that it is possible for one to make a high profession of faith in Christ and even so to live as to give no cause for criticism, and yet to be unregenerate and in fact the enemy of Christ.

Observe (v. 24) that while Jesus was betrayed and went to the cross in fulfillment of prophecy, that fact did not in the slightest justify His enemies who brought it about (see Acts 2:23, R. V.).

III. The First Communion (vv. 26-30).

Taking the unleavened bread and the unfermented wine of the Passover, which had just been observed by Him for the last time, Jesus established a new feast, the Christian feast of remembrance, which we commonly call "communion" or "the Lord's table."

As we have already suggested, it is a feast of remembrance. "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till He come" (I Cor. 11:26). At the Lord's table His followers find spiritual strength in remembering His death for them, and they also find joy as they remember that He is to come again. In doing so they testify to the world that they believe in and cherish these truths.

This feast is also rightly called "communion," for down through the ages and until He does come the saints of God have at His table sweet communion, first of all with Him, and then with one another.

We also note that our Lord spoke of the cup as "my blood of the new testament " The word "testament" means "covenant." The Lord's table therefore speaks of our allegiance to Him, of our loyalty to our Lord, and our devotion to His service. The Christian church therefore speaks of the communion service as a sacrament, a word taken from the Latin sacramentum, meaning "oath," and essentially an oath of allegiance.

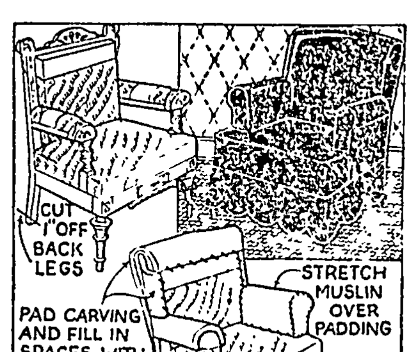
His body was broken for us, His blood was shed for the remission of our sins. We are bought with a price, we are not our own. Therefore we are to glorify God with all that we have and are.

Examples Wanted

Whether in the home or in the church, exhortation to goodness is about the most idle waste of breath. People do not want exhortations. They want examples.—Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



HERE is proof of what a beauty treatment and a new costume will do for an out-of-date chair. Its new dress is very chic. The material is a soft old red cotton crash with seam cordings and binding for the scalloped skirt in dove gray.

An inch was cut from the back legs to tilt the chair for greater comfort. The carving at the top and the upholstery on the back and arms were left in place, but the lines of the chair were completely changed by padding with cotton batting. Unbleached muslin was then stretched over the padding to make all perfectly smooth. Soft rags or excelsior may be used for filling under the cotton if desired.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears has prepared four booklets for our readers containing a total of 128 thrifty homemaking ideas; with step-by-step illustrated directions. Each book contains an assortment of curtains; slip-covers; household furnishings; rag rugs; toys; gifts and novelties for bazaars. Books may be ordered one at a time at 10 cents each; but if you enclose 40 cents with your order for four books (No 1, 2, 3 and 4) you will receive a FREE set of three quilt block patterns of Mrs. Spears' Favorite Early American designs. Address: Mrs. Spears, Drawer 10, Bedford Hills, New York.

Evidently Young Man Had But a Peep for the Ring

The young man had just proposed to the most beautiful girl in the world. She had accepted him, and now he stepped into a jeweler's to buy an engagement ring. He examined various rings, and finally picked up a beautiful diamond.

"What's the price of this?" he inquired.

"That," replied the assistant, "is $250."

The young man's eyes popped. He whistled loudly and long—then pointed to a second ring.

"And this one?" he asked.

"This one, sir," said the assistant, eyeing the price-tag, "is two whistles!"

SOYBEAN SEED IS NOT GROWING WELL

Germination Has Varied From 48 To 98 Per Cent In Tests At Ames

Some samples of 1939 soybeans have germinated so poorly in tests at the Iowa State College Leed Laboratory that Dr. R. H Porter, head of the laboratory, this week urged all farmers to have their soybean seed tested before planting.

Germination of 57 samples tested during recent weeks varied from 48 per cent to 98 per cent.

Other States Low

"The reason for such unusually low germination of some samples is not definitely known," Dr. Porter said "But there's no doubt the advisability of having all seed lots tested."

Reports have come from adjoining states, particularly Illinois, Ohio, and Missouri, that germination of soybeans is considerably below normal this year, Porter said. The tests at Ames indicate that germination of Iowa soybeans may not be quite so low, but additional tests must be run before any definite conclusions can be drawn.

Average 82 and 90

Germination of 32 samples sent in to the laboratory by farmers averaged 82 per cent and ranged from 48 per cent to 90 per cent, Porter said.

Nineteen samples from seed companies averaged 90 per cent germination.

Six samples sent in from outside of Iowa had an average germination of only 74 per cent.

In an experiment in which 196 Iowa farmers reported on the use of 199 sets of tractor tires, the estimated useful life of the tires varied from 3 to 15 years with an average of 7 years, and the estimated useful hours of use averaged 6,765.

The farm mortgage debt in the United States stands at approximately 7 million dollars, the lowest figure in 20 years. In the early '20's the debt was nearly 11 billion dollars. Foreclosures and distress transfers have caused most of the reduction, although repayments are becoming increasingly important.

MARLENE DIETRICH, JAMES STEWART IN BIG WESTERN

Marlene Dietrich in the role of a frontier entertainer co-stars with lanky James Stewart in Universal's, "Destry Rides Again", which opens Sunday, March 10, at the Avery Theatre One of the season's most unusual pictures, "Destry Rides Again" is a marked departure from Miss Dietrich's recent screen roles. It is said to afford her a characterization greatly similiar to her work in "Blue Angel". the film which she first attained stardom.

The list of players include Mischa Auer, Charles Winninger, Brian Donlevy, Irene Hervey, Una Merkel, Allen Jenkins, and many others. The picture is frankly a dramatic spectacle of the old west in which hard riding and quick shooting are interspersed with the stirring mob scenes that have filled so many pages in the history of the American Frontier.

CHOOSE DESSERT TO FIT MAKEUP OF MEAL
(See Recipes Below)

What Shall I Serve for Dessert?

To most of us "something sweet" served at the close of a meal is as important as the main dish itself. For dessert, men undoubtedly have a penchant for such substantial item as pie, ice cream and chocolate cake; but they seem to like the homey, less spectacular desserts almost as much. Baked apples, old-fashioned apple dumplings, rice pudding and fresh fruit desserts are masculine favorites and they're simple enough to suit the youngsters of the family, too. You'll find suggestions and recipes for the desserts that father likes, in my cook book, "Feeding Father."

When you choose a dessert, consider first the meal as a whole—is it substantial or light? If it's a hearty, heavy meal, choose a light dessert, because appetites are likely to be pretty well satisfied by the time the dessert course appears. On the other hand, if the meal has been light, a hearty, satisfying sweet course is in order.

Choose your dessert, too, to fit the general make-up of the meal. Don't forget that contrast is important. If you've had a fruit salad, avoid serving a fruit dessert; if spanish rice or macaroni made up the main dish of the meal don't serve a starchy sweet.

And speaking of desserts: when your facilities for entertaining are limited, why not plan a "dessert party"? Invite your guests to skip their dessert at home, and have it with you. Dessert, with a beverage, is all you serve—and you serve it before the bridge playing or other entertainment begins.

Fruit Macaroon Dessert.
(Serves 6)

3 cups canned fruit
¾ cup flour
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg

Pour fruit and juice into shallow pan about 6 by 10 by 2 inches in size. Sift together the flour, sugar, baking powder and salt. Add unbeaten egg and mix well. Spread this mixture (which will be very crumbly) over the fruit and bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for about 30 minutes.

Chocolate Fig Pudding.
(Serves 6)

3½ cups soft bread crumbs
1½ teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ cup white sugar
¾ cup brown sugar
½ cup milk
2 eggs (beaten)
3 squares unsweetened chocolate (melted)
½ pound dried figs
¾ cup suet

Combine crumbs, baking powder, salt and sugar. Add milk and eggs. Blend in the melted chocolate. Wash figs, remove stems and put figs and suet through food chopper. Add to other ingredients and mix well. Pour into a well greased casserole, cover and bake in a slow oven (250 degrees) for 2½ hours. Serve hot with a custard sauce or whipped cream.

Orange Torte.
(Serves 6)

½ cup butter
¾ cup granulated sugar
1 egg (separated)
1¼ cups general purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
½ cup buttermilk
½ cup dates (cut fine)
½ cup nut meats (cut fine)
1 teaspoon lemon extract
1 orange

Cream butter thoroughly; then add ½ cup sugar while beating constantly. Blend well and add beaten egg yolk. Mix and sift together the flour, baking powder, salt, and soda. Add alternately with the buttermilk, beginning and ending with the flour mixture. Add dates and nuts, lemon extract and orange pulp, reserving orange juice carefully. Fold in the beaten egg white. Place in small angel food or torte pan (well greased). Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for approximately 35 to 40 minutes. After removing from oven allow cake to stand undisturbed in the pan for 10 minutes. Then pour over it, by teaspoonfuls, the orange juice in which the remaining ¼ cup sugar has been dissolved. Serve with whipped cream if desired.

If you're planning a party for St. Patrick's day, be sure to watch for Eleanor Howe's column next week. You'll find here several practical menus for that Irish holiday, recipes tested in Eleanor Howe's own kitchen, and suggestions for table decorations, too.

Lemon Sauce.

1 cup sugar
grated rind and juice of 1 lemon
2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 cup boiling water
⅛ teaspoon salt

Add grated rind and juice of the lemon to the sugar. Beat egg yolks until light. Moisten cornstarch with a little cold water and add to the beaten egg yolks. Mix thoroughly with lemon and sugar mixture. Place in double boiler, add boiling water and salt and cook, stirring constantly, until thickened. Serve hot.

Red Raspberry Snow Balls
(Makes 6 Snow Balls)

¼ cup butter
½ cup sugar
1 cup general purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup milk
2 egg whites (beaten)

Cream the butter. Add sugar and beat well. Mix and sift flour, baking powder, and salt. Add alternately with the milk and then fold in the beaten egg whites. Steam in small buttered molds for 30 to 35 minutes. Serve with red raspberry sauce.

Apple Dumplings.

2 cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup shortening
½ cup milk
¼ cup orange juice
6 tart apples (medium size)
½ cup sugar
nutmeg cinnamon
butter

Mix and sift dry ingredients and cut in shortening; add liquid. Roll dough to quarter-inch thickness and cut in 4-inch squares. Pare and core apples. Place one apple in center of each square and fill center of apples with a mixture of sugar, cinnamon and nutmeg. Dot with butter and pinch the four corners of the dough together. Prick with a fork and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 30 to 40 minutes. Serve with lemon sauce.

Sportlight by Grantland Rice

LOS ANGELES.—"It may be a long time," Ty Cobb told me the other day, "before anyone breaks up that Yankee pennant march. They still have too much all-around stuff, anywhere and everywhere you look—I mean pitching and catching, infield and outfield, offense and defense, power and speed.

Grantland Rice

"I know there is a feeling here and there that after four years of success a team is sure to start slipping. But it so happens that most of the Yankees are young men and young players—Gordon, DiMaggio, Rolfe, Keller, and several of the pitchers—they are a young team.

"It might be different if the Red Sox could dig up better pitching. But few on the outside understand today just how hard it is to find good pitching—to locate any good pitchers not already in big league harness. They are scarcer than they ever were.

Coming On

"In addition to the present Yankee team, everyone knows about the number of star junior Yankees coming up from the Yankee farms. These will be good enough to replace any open gap. Several of them are good enough now.

"The club's hardest job should be replacing Bill Dickey when Bill decides it is time to step out. This will be no easy job, but Bill isn't stepping out yet—not by several years. He has a good aid in Rosar also."

"Why was it that old-time pennant winning clubs began to crack up after two or three good years?" I asked Ty. "The Tigers began fading after three straight. Neither the old Cubs nor old Athletics could make it four straight either."

"We had more all-around opposition then," Ty said. "And we never had the younger replacements ready when some of our veterans began slipping. We had no such quantity of talent on hand. You can't find a single weak spot in the Yankees. And maybe they have more ambition, as a team, than some of the others had. From what I understand the Yankees keep in just as good physical shape as any college football team. That helps a lot, when you are headed for any long stretch."

About Young Keller

There is a good chance that young Charlie Keller of the Yankees will be one of the 1940 sensations—out there giving Red Sox Williams a tough scrap for the sophomore honors.

"I've never seen an athlete work harder or train harder than Keller does," one of his mates from the University of Maryland told me. "Charlie Keller used to get up early and do several miles of road work when he was in college. Nothing could make him break training. He was keen to learn and his natural co-ordination was amazing. We figured then he was going a long way."

One of the most unusual features of Keller's ability is the tremendous strength of his hands and forearms.

"You almost have to have strong hands and strong forearms," Keller said, "when you start milking 18 cows at the age of eight. There's nothing like milking to build up hand strength."

Keller is now one of the game's most powerful hitters. He may not keep pace with Ted Williams in this respect, but he won't be far away. He can use a little more polishing in his outfield play, but this is sure to come from a young star so willing to learn his trade.

Ambitious Keller

"Any ball club is lucky to pick up a player of the Keller type," Cobb said. "I mean one with that much ambition. For ambition is a big factor in baseball success. You have to love the game and you have to be ready to discipline yourself to get results. It's very true that not every ball player is set up along these lines. Too many of them—players of both yesterday and today—just take the game in their stride, and pay little attention to it when they're no longer on the field.

WASHINGTON.—A long series of backstage conversations, some informal, some obscure, have preceded the European peace trip of Undersecretary of State Welles.

Some have been carried on by accredited diplomats, some by purely unofficial envoys, and some actually have got into the state department's hair. Here is a description of one confidential peace overture in which the President was interested, which also throws light on the Roosevelt row with John L. Lewis.

In late September, about three weeks after war broke, W. R. Davis, the international oil man, was visiting with John L. Lewis and Walter Jones of Pittsburgh in the latter's apartment, and told of various conversations he had had with Hitler.

Davis had been selling Mexican oil to Germany, was intimate with high-placed Nazis, and told of their ideas for permanent European peace.

"I think the President ought to know about this," remarked John L. Lewis, and went into an anteroom where he called the President. He had no difficulty getting him, and said: "Mr. President, there's a man here I think you ought to see. He's got some important ideas on the war."

So Roosevelt made an appointment.

British Secret Service.

When Davis arrived at the White House he was introduced to Adolf Berle, assistant secretary of state, and noticed, during his conversation with Roosevelt, that Berle was busy taking notes.

This caused Davis to protest "I thought this was to be a confidential conversation between you and me."

"Oh, Adolf's all right," and the President brushed the protest aside.

In the end, Roosevelt suggested that Davis fly back to Germany, get any concrete peace proposals which Hitler might have, and report back.

So Davis caught the Clipper for Portugal. The first stop was Bermuda, where a plainclothes man tapped him on the shoulder and said: "Come along with me. I'd like to talk to you."

He turned out to be a member of the British secret service, who warned Davis to go back to the United States or else his passport would be lifted. He seemed to know all about the Davis peace trip. However, Davis raised such a fuss that he was finally allowed to proceed—though not until after the Clipper had been kept 24 hours in Bermuda waiting for him.

From that point on, the British did everything possible to handicap Davis, even canceling his passage from Portugal so that he had to take a plane to Morocco and thence on to Germany. But at last Davis got to Berlin, interviewed the highest Nazi leaders, and flew back to the United States, arriving in late October.

With him he carried several long, closely written pages in German, giving the ideas on which Hitler was willing to discuss peace.

American Detectives.

Davis took an apartment in the Mayflower and began to translate the document. Then, suddenly, he discovered two men sitting outside his door. They were G-men.

At this point Walter Jones, close friend of Davis, went to the management to complain. There he discovered that not merely two G-men, but five were in the hotel, and that they had trailed Davis from the moment he registered. Apparently the British secret service and the justice department were working closely together—and neither for peace.

A day or so later, Davis presented the German peace plan orally to Berle for transmission to the President. Present also was Walter Jones, but no one else. It was emphasized that the entire conversation was strictly confidential.

This was at noon. Later that day Davis and Jones motored to Harrisburg, Pa., where a phone call from Washington reached them—a query from a newspaper man.

"The state department tells me that you and W R Davis have brought a peace proposal from Germany," the newsman asked Jones.

LOVE AND BUSES.

An Institute of Family Relations has completed a study of romance and discovered that more proposals of marriage are made in automobiles than in the home. But the ones made at home are still the better bet.

Lack of privacy in the home is given as the reason for the triumph of the flivver over the front parlor, but the Institute misses the big point. When a couple do their courting in an auto they are the bosses of their own lighting arrangements.

You even had to look over the family photographs!

You and Arabella got along after what seemed years.

Every few minutes you had to say in a loud voice, "Yes, the exhibition at the art gallery this year is wonderful," or cough and shout, "Isn't it terrible about the Philippines?"

And then there was the time limit hanging over you, and the signal system, with mother calling, "Arabella, is that you down there?" one of the silliest questions of all time.

Deerfield Massacre in 1704 Was Most Historic Event Ever to Take Place on Calendar's Rare Date—"Leap Year Day"

ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

PROBABLY the most historic event which has ever taken place on that date in our calendar—February 29—or "Leap Year Day"—was a famous Indian massacre which had many a frantic aftermath. That was the attack on and burning of the town of Deerfield, Mass., on February 29, 1704.

With the outbreak of Queen Anne's war between England and France in 1702, Deerfield, on the Connecticut river, was the farthest northwest settlement in New England. Although there were frequent alarms of impending attack by the French and Indians, the inhabitants felt reasonably secure behind the log walls of the stockade surrounding the town, although it was badly in need of repair and the governor of Massachusetts had disregarded their appeals for money with which to do the necessary work.

Regularly at night a sentry was posted on the walls to watch for the approaching enemy who never came—until the winter of 1704. Early in February a force of 200 Frenchmen, commanded by Hertel de Rouville and accompanied by 140 Indian allies, set out from Canada for Deerfield. The weather was bitter cold and snow covered the ground to a depth of several feet. By the evening of February 28 De Rouville's force had reached the elevated pine plain, now known as Petty's plain, two miles north of Deerfield, where they hid themselves until midnight.

Assuming that the crust on the snow was strong enough to bear their weight, the invaders laid aside their snowshoes and packs and pushed on, crossing the Deerfield meadows a little before daybreak. Fearing that their approach would be heard, they adopted the stratagem of rushing forward swiftly for a moment, then resting, then rushing forward again so that the noise they made would sound like the rustling of the wind. But there was no necessity for this caution. For everyone in Deerfield was fast asleep—including the sentries on guard that night!

Over the Stockade.

Although the main gate of the stockade was securely barred, the snow had drifted so deeply in the northwest corner of the stockade that the enemy had no difficulty in swarming over the tops of the log walls there. They quickly scattered through the town and the people of Deerfield were awakened from their slumbers by the sound of the war-whoop and the crashing of tomahawks against their doors.

The largest, most imposing house in Deerfield was that of Ensign John Sheldon, afterward famed as the "Old Indian House." It was built in 1698, its wooden walls lined with brick. The upper story projected over the lower and was provided with loopholes. The door was made of two thicknesses of see the hatchet-hewn door of the "Old Indian House," which was preserved when the house was torn down in 1848, and the bullet which ended poor Mrs. Sheldon's life.

At the time of the attack, Sheldon was absent but three of his children and a daughter-in-law, besides Mrs. Sheldon, were there and were taken prisoners. Afterwards Sheldon, though middle-aged, made three long, weary trips to Canada, by order of Governor Dudley, to redeem his children and other captives and it is said that through his efforts no less than 113 prisoners from Deerfield and other New England towns were released.

But of all the stories connected with this historic tragedy, none is more romantic than that of the settlement's pastor, the Rev. John Williams. Born at Roxbury, Mass., on December 10, 1664, he was one of 13 children born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Williams, and was baptized by the Rev. John Elliot, the famous "Apostle to the Indians." After graduating from Harvard, where he had studied for the ministry in the class of 1683, (there were only three members of that class and all were from Roxbury) young Williams began to look about for a pulpit.

Since he was only 18 he could not expect to obtain an important parish, but young ministers were needed on the frontier and three years later he accepted a call to the settlement of Deerfield in what was then the wilderness of western Massachusetts. En route to his pastorate in the wilds, he stopped at the home of Rev. Solomon Stoddard at Northampton where he met Stoddard's stepdaughter, Eunice Mather. The following summer they were married and Williams took his bride to the "hous 40 ft. long, 20 ft. wide with a lentoo

There their five children were born and there they lived happily until that tragic morning of February 29, 1704. When the French and Indians attacked the parson's home, he sprang from his bed, seized a pistol and leveled it at an Indian who had dashed into his room. He pulled the trigger but it missed fire and he was immediately made prisoner. He was compelled to dress with one arm tied to his side, as were his wife and children, but one of the latter and a Negro girl servant were immediately tomahawked.

A Bleak Journey.

After killing a total of 49 persons in Deerfield, the French and Indians set fire to the houses inside the stockade and herded their captives, 111 in number, together for the bleak journey across the snowy landscape toward Canada. Parson Williams, who spoke several Indian languages, was able to talk to his captors and persuaded them to allow him to help his wife, who had been ill and whose strength was gradually failing. On the second day of their journey she told him that she could not hold out much longer. Later in the day she fell exhausted and the story of her fate is told in the inscription on a tablet affixed to a granite stone which marks the spot where she sank to the ground. It reads:

"The cruel and bloodthirsty savage who took her slew her with his hatchet at one stroke.

"Rev. John Williams of Deerfield, the redeemed captive, so wrote of his wife Mrs. Eunice Williams, who was killed at this place, March 1st, 1704.

Other settlers in the Connecticut valley, following hard upon the retreating invaders, found her body and bore it back to the burned and plundered settlement. Visit the ancient Deerfield burial ground today and you will find there a red-brown headstone, its top weathered and broken. From its top a death's head grins at you and below is engraved these lines:

"Here lyeth the Body of Mrs. Eunice Williams the Vertuous & desirable Consort of the Revrd. Mr. John Williams & Daughter to ye Revrd. Mr. Eleazer & Mrs. Esther Mather of Northampton. She was Born Aug: 2, 1664 and fell by the rage of ye Barbarous Enemy March 1, 1703-4."

Meanwhile Parson Williams and his four surviving children were on their way to Canada, enduring that terrible journey which he so graphically describes in the book "The Redeemed Captive Returning to Zion," published several years later. Among these four was a little seven-year-old girl named Eunice (for her mother), who was carried most of the way on the brawny shoulders of an Indian warrior.

The "White Indian."

After two years' captivity, Parson Williams and his children were ransomed and returned to Deerfield—all except Eunice. The Indians had adopted her and despite her father's utmost efforts he was unable to secure her release. She grew up at Caughnawaga on the St. Lawrence river and married a Mohawk warrior who had been converted to the Catholic faith and by whom she had several children. However, this "White Indian" did not entirely separate herself from her father but at his earnest request made several visits to his home m Deerfield with her son and two daughters. The entreaties of her relatives to give up her life with the Indians and return to the Protestant faith, were useless for she always went back to her husband at Caughnawaga and she died a "Catholic Indian." According to tradition, during her visits to her father's home in Deerfield she would retire to the guest room at night but morning would always find her crouched before the fireplace in the morning with her blanket wrapped around her in the fashion of Indian women.

One of her daughters, Sarah, married an Indian and one of their sons was Te-ho-ra-gwa-ne-gen, or Thomas Williams, a noted warrior who fought on the side of the British during the American Revolution. One of Thomas Williams' numerous progeny was Eleazer Williams, destined for future fame as the man who claimed to be the "Lost Dauphin" of France.

The fate of the "Lost Dauphin" is one of the most tantalizing mysteries in history. Soon after the outbreak of the French Revolution, the royal family of France were imprisoned by the Paris Commune in the Temple, the palace of the Grand Friar of the Knights Templars.

On January 21, 1793, the king was beheaded. Later the queen also went under the knife, leaving only the Dauphin, Louis Charles, and his sister, Princess Marie Therese, in the prison. The little prince is supposed to have died there on June 8, 1795, but in the years that followed his death, no less than 25 persons who claimed that they were the "Lost Dauphin" appeared before the French courts from time to time to press their claims and to disturb the peace of mind of the new republican government of France.

Among them was one in far-off America—the Rev. Eleazer Williams, an Episcopal missionary among the Indians in New York and Wisconsin. He was one of 13 children born to a Mohawk Indian chief, Te-ho-ra-gwa-ne-gen or Thomas Williams, (grandson of Eunice Williams), and Mary Ann (Rice) Williams, who was of mingled Indian and New England ancestry, being descended from a captive taken during an Indian foray on Marlboro, Mass., early in the Eighteenth century. Eleazer Williams grew up among the Mohawks at Caughnawaga, Quebec, but was educated in New England During the War of 1812 he served brilliantly as the head of a corps of scouts and spies for the American army.

Later he became a missionary among his father's people, the Mohawks, first as a Congregationalist and later as an Episcopalian. When they and other Iroquois tribesmen were being hard-pressed by the advancing tide of white settlement in New York, he was instrumental in obtaining lands for them in the frontier country of Wisconsin.

At some time during Williams' early career, he heard the story of the "Lost Dauphin" and having been told that he resembled the Bourbon prince, he decided to advance his claims to being the "Lost Dauphin."

Due to a scrofulous taint in his family, the bruises and injuries which he received while he was a child engaged in the rough sports of his Indian playmates, left permanent scars on him and, it is claimed, in later life he increased the size of these by artificial means. Williams, however, asserted that these scars were the result of the shackles and chains with which he was burdened when he was the child prisoner in the Temple in Paris.

In 1841 the Prince de Joinville, son of King Louis Philippe, then reigning in France, followed his father's example and paid a visit to America. During the trip on the Great Lakes, the prince found awaiting him at Mackinac a clerical-looking gentleman who asked permission to accompany the prince's party to Green Bay, Wis. This cleric was Eleazer Williams.

Soon after the departure of the prince from Green Bay, Williams gave out the astonishing statement that De Joinville had acknowledged that he (Williams) was the "Lost Dauphin" and therefore the rightful Louis XVII and that the prince had sought him out in the western wilderness to ask him to renounce his claim to the throne of France. A few years later Williams told his story to Rev. J. H. Hanson who wrote an article "Have We a Bourbon Among Us?" which appeared in the February, 1853, number of Putnam's Monthly.

When a copy of this magazine was received in England, where the Prince de Joinville was then living as an exile from France, he immediately repudiated the alleged interview with Williams at Green Bay and denounced him as an impostor. However, a book by Hanson, "The Lost Prince," which gave a detailed account of Williams' life and which proved, to the satisfaction of the author, at least, that the Mohawk half-breed missionary was indeed the "Lost Dauphin," gained for Williams many adherents.

Although Eleazer maintained during the rest of his days his right to the throne of France, nothing tangible ever came of his pretensions and when he died on August 28, 1858, on the St. Regis reservation near Hogansburg, N. Y., he was buried with Masonic rites as "Brother Eleazer Williams."

GETHSEMANE: TRIUMPH THROUGH SURRENDER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 26:36-46.
GOLDEN TEXT—Not as I will, but as thou wilt.—Matthew 26:39.

Surrender brings victory.

The world would say that our statement is not true; surrender is the mark of defeat. It is the final chapter in a story of struggle against impossible circumstances, against a stronger power, and finally of giving up to accept the bitter sorrow of subjection and sometimes destruction. But again we say, the way of strength is through surrender, for we speak of the spiritual realm and of our relationship to God. Here there is no victory until there is surrender. In fact, the measure of victory is the degree of surrender. Full submission to Christ means complete triumph for the Christian. The Lord Jesus does not ask His disciples to walk a way which He has not trod Himself. He went the way of full surrender to the will of God in the garden of Gethsemane. We observe five things about this way of "triumph through surrender." It was

I. A Way of Sorrow (vv. 37, 38).

He was exceedingly sorrowful unto death. It was not an easy thing that the Saviour did as He fulfilled the will of God the Father in the garden. We know that no man ever sorrowed as He did on that day, for only He bore the sins of the world. There is, however, a lesson here for us who are His disciples. If this is the road the Master trod, should not His servants tread it still? The way of victory for us is through surrender.

II. A Way of Self-Denial (vv. 39, 42, 44).

Self-denial does not consist in depriving one's self of some little cherished luxury. It means the denial of self, namely, that self-will is put aside and God's will is supreme.

It was no "easy thing for Jesus to carry out the Father's will and to go to the cross. He was submissive to that will; yet in this hour of anguish in the garden, when the unspeakable horror of what lay ahead almost overwhelmed His soul, it means much to say, 'Not as I will but as thou wilt' " (Dr. B. L. Olmstead). It may be a hard thing to do, but by His grace we too may say, "Thy will be done."

III. A Way of Loneliness (vv. 36, 37, 40, 41, 43).

There were three disciples with Him as He entered the garden, and their very presence reminds us how very much alone Jesus actually was. There were twelve with Him in the upper room, but one went out into the darkness to betray Him. Eleven came with Him to the gate of the garden, but only three came into the garden with Him. Even they could not go all the way with Him. He prayed and agonized alone, and the three who were near at hand failed Him and slept through the dark hour when He most needed their fellowship in sympathy and prayer.

Alone? If the Master had to walk the way of surrender alone, let no Christian expect that it will be otherwise for him. Let us thank God for every blessing of true fellowship, but let us not be surprised if we are often called to walk alone—with God.

IV. A Way of Betrayal (vv. 45, 46).

"He is at hand who doth betray me" "into the hands of sinners." One feels that the cup of the Master is already overfull without adding betrayal by one of His own, but there it is, a dark and tragic reality. Note with what peace and assurance Jesus goes to meet it. The victory has already been won in prayer, in communion with the Father, and in submission to His will.

No one of us will ever know such a betrayal as that of our Lord, but we do face similar crises as we go on in a life of devotion to God's will. We do well to remember the experience of Christ that we be not overwhelmed by the treachery of men and that we prepare ourselves to meet it with the power and grace of our God.

V. A Way of Divine Fellowship and Blessing (vv. 39, 42).

The way of surrender is a glorious and delightful way to go. But, some one may ask, have we not been talking of sorrow, self-denial, loneliness and betrayal? Yes, but even these things may become the means of blessing if God is in them.

Though no man stood by our Lord in His experience in Gethsemane, the Father was there. Jesus talked with Him, prayed to Him, trusted Him, yielded fully to His will, and the result was peace and blessing. We read in Luke 22:43 that an angel also came and strengthened Him.

No Plates.

When his license plates were stolen in Washington, D. C., Geo. Bradford, of Chariton, was not embarrassed. He just completed his three week's trip home in leisurely fashion, without benefit of plates. and was not stopped once by officers.

Wow!

When some hot dyeing liquid was splashed at her, Mrs. Arie Van Ryswk, of near Pella, didn't forget to duck. In fact, she ducked so enthusiastically that she dislocated her neck and is now confined to the hospital with her neck and upper part of her body in a plaster cast.

Hard Luck.

Paul Buckley, Coon Rapids junior, lost his dessert one evening last week but has no one to blame but himself. Coming from school, he removed his galoshes and carefully set them down upon what appeared to be a little patch of snow on the porch. When his mother went out to bring in a lemon meringue pie which she had set out on the porch to cool, she found Paul's galoshes parked on the pie.

Back To Farm.

After 45 years of life in town, Abe Risely of Rockwell City is making a personal "back to the farm" movement. 52 years ago, Mr. Risely, then a 34 year old farmer, was named township road supervisor. After seven years he became sheriff of Calhoun county and eventually was named postmaster Successively, he was deputy sheriff for a period of 14 years and for the past two years has been district court baliff and mayor of Rockwell City. And now, after 52 years of public service, he will return to the farm life he left many years ago.

Would Fight.

Virgil Harris, Cedar Rapids robber who is now a guest in the Texas state penintentiary, has offered to fight in the Finnish army if they will let him out of jail. His picture was used in a New York in connection with his plea but so far Texas has declined his proposition.

Bad Judgment.

Wilhelm Schalebeam of Minneapolis used bad judgment last week. He passed a truck on the highway and nearly ran into an oncoming car, forcing the driver out on the shoulder. The offended driver, highway patrolman C. Hofman, immediately launched a pursuit and brought Schalebeam to the bars of justice. It cost the latter $7.

Good Haul.

A. W. Bueler, Sac county resident, is perhaps the world's champion crow catcher. Last week he collected a bounty of $354.60 on 3,546 crows which he caught in a special trap. A good many communities would be glad to know his methods.

"Not Workable."

The Audubon county board of education recently discussed a proposition whereby rural schools in that county would be automatically called off on each morning when the thermometer reached a certain temperature below freezing. The board decided that no 2 thermometers in the county would be in agreement and that the plan would result in confusion.

OPEN DOORS . . . .

When Governor Wilson took office more than a year ago, he established an "open door" policy. The doors to his private office, kept closed under preceding administrations, have not been closed since. All visitors have an opportunity to interview the governor, and no conferences in the governor's office, not even the executive council meetings, are behind closed doors in "star chamber" session. It did not take long for the governor to find that the policy was popular. He has interviewed probably more persons each day than any previous governor, and the result has been that most of his time has been taken up with interviews. His desk work and dictation has been done in slack moments, or during the noon hour (he eats no lunch), or in his study at home in the evenings. He oftens takes an armful of work home with him at night.

VACATION? . . .

Governor and Mrs. Wilson this week were in California, where the governor was to address the Iowa Association of California, which claims 100,000 former Iowans as members. He is the first Iowa governor to address the picnic Billed as a vacation, the trip turned out to have only one day of rest included. Out of some 40 invitations, the governor had accepted seven California speaking engagements besides the Iowa picnic, before his departure.

That record is obtaining more attention daily. It now shows from the federal records that the cost of eight years of the New Deal is $65,629,000,000, a figure which taxes not only the pocketbook but the imagination of the average man. Figures that high pass beyond the comprehension of average people living west of the Hudson river But comparisons may throw some light on it. It took 130 years and 27 presidents, throughout the greater part of the history and progress of this nation, to top the total expenditures the New Deal has rung up in a short eight years The treasury records show that all the peace-time and all the war-time expenditures from 1789 to 1920 inclusive, covering, incidentally, the world war expenditures, totaled $66,344,000,000. And the New Deal has operated during peace-time.

WAR!

The Kaiser had a urge for land,
He got some and soon wanted more,
And so our country joined
A war to end all war

The war was over soon,
The Ally side had won,
We all had yet to realize
The damage that was done

For Hitler soon was dictator,
A crazier man by far
Than the old Kaiser had been
When he had fought for power.

Now Europe cries once more for help,
But our war planes will not soar
For we remember when we fought
A war to end all war

By Shirley Johnson

THE WORLD

I walked alone one winter night,
The world lay sleeping, cold and still.
The snowflakes danced with pure delight
On field and road, and nearby hill.

I left a smokey, dirty town
And thought t'was like this war-torn earth,
Where strife and hatred both aboun'
And poverty and crime have birth

I slowly climbed a rugged hill
The path was crooked, long, and steep,
The wind was harsh, and raw, and chill
My task seemed hopeless, vain, and bleak.

I reached my goal and saw below
A country church half hid in snow.
The worship there can never cease
Its message to the world is "Peace".

DROP IS SEEN IN TURKEY PRODUCTION

Reduction Because of Low Price, High Feed Cost Forecast

AMES— Some reduction in turkey production can be expected this year because of low prices and prospects of continued high feed costs.

This is the conclusion of members of the Iowa State college agricultural economics staff, who have just completed a report on the turkey out look for 1940.

"Turkey growers have invariably reduced productions following years in which they sold a large crop at a low price," they state. "And last year's crop was the biggest on record—22 per cent greater than in 1938 Producers got a bigger income but smaller margin of profit a bird."

Free Offer.

HYBRIDS LEAD IN IOWA CORN YIELD TEST

The average yield of all hybrid was greater than that of the open-pollinated varieties in each of the 12 districts of the Iowa Corn Yield Test, according to Joe L. Robinson, Secretary of the Iowa Corn and Small Grain Growers' Asscia-tion.

The average advantage of the hybrids in the test, however, were not superior In 6 of the 12 districts the lowest yield was made by an open-pollinated variety, in 2 by an experimental hybrid and in 4 by a regular hybrid.

FEDERAL "ALL RISK" CROP INSURANCE

The following press report from the Federal Crop Insurance Division of the United States Department of Agriculture is of considerable interest to grain farmers, states R. G. Clark, Chief of the Iowa Dairy and Food Division.

Nearly three times as many winter wheat producers are using Federal "all risk" crop insurance this year as used it in 1939. The Federal Crop Insurance Corporation announced today that 310,000 winter wheat producers have taken out insurance on their 1940 crops, compared to 107,000 in 1939

Total contracts written last year by the Corporation in its 1st year of operation—covering both winter and spring wheat—amounted to 166,000. This year it is estimated that nearly 400,000 wheat farmers will use the "all risk" insurance as a means of insuring their 1940 wheat crops The closing date for taking out insurance on spring wheat was Feb. 29th.

According to Clark, the Iowa farmer eyeing the "all risk" insurance program covering wheat crops, wonders if there is a probability of extending the program to the corn farmer.

Kathleen Norris Says:

This May Be the Means of Saving Your Son's Life

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

Wait until war propaganda has done its deadly work and the boy in your family comes in and says, "Mom, I just signed up. I go to report Monday."

YOUTH AND WAR

Youth won't wait. It is one of the devilish subtleties of war that it wants our sons just when they are old enough to make their own decisions and young enough to love excitement and change.

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

HERE is an organization now in process of formation in America that you ought to join. Organization's name is the V's Legion.

You are among the millions of who have been saying since 1919 they "wish you could do something about war," then this is your chance.

If we don't take this chance then we complain if we get into the disastrous and unnecessary war that is seething all over Europe and then one day your boy goes away.

He may never come back. In that case you pack up his sweaters and skates, and school pictures and hiking boots, and the fishing pole and tennis racket, and you send them to the Salvation Army and close the door of his room. And close a door in your heart, forever.

Of course he may come back. They may bring him very tenderly through the door on a stretcher and he will grope for your hand and say in the dear voice you love best in all the world, "Is that you, mom? I lost my eyes and my knee. I wish dad knew that?"

For a few days everyone will come. Neighbors, friends old and young will drop in to cheer up that nice Baker boy who was so badly wished and is now back at his home again.

Then they'll stop. He'll sit, in his room, wasted, silent youth, in the front room; he'll have the time he'll master Braille. You'll see him, as you come and go, and tell him that his old pal Joe has married a lovely girl, and they are sending Billy Brown to the Australian branch, wonderful news for Billy! And Sister Kate has a darling baby. Would Keith like to hold his young nephew for a few minutes?

You will see his face grow more and more sober, as the months go by; you see him droop a little. And then, when he's middle-aged, still lame and helpless and idle in his wheel window, and when you're getting to be an old lady, you'll read the headline. "They're talking of another war over in Europe again, Keith."

It is what we Americans cannot understand, and never will understand, that is the war theory is part of their scheme over there. They believe in war. They believe that side that kills the greatest number of young men and blows up the largest number of innocent villages MUST be right. They've believed that since the days of Charlemagne. They're proving again today they think might is right. If a neighbor believes something we don't, then you kill him to prove that what you believe is the right.

The point of view is different. We believe that the ideology we must defend, and the only ideology we must defend, is the delusion that might is right. That the most powerful army is the army of God. That war accomplishes anything that can be accomplished simply and reasonably and established without recourse to that war.

Every European nation in these twenty years since the Armistice signed, if ONE of them, even the smallest, had put forth honest peace feelers, had developed a PLAN for peace, we might feel very differently about our response to their appeal for help today. If the churches, instead of reiterating their pious desire for peace, had formulated a PLAN, then there never would have been this war. Instead, injustices, embargoes, blockades, punishments, reprisals went serenely on. Nobody cared about adjusting the pernicious terms of the peace treaties, because everyone was too busy forming plans for the next war.

They Never Have Enough.

This has been going on in Europe for five hundred years. They've had a Hundred Years war, a Thirty Years war, religious wars, civil wars. They've always given high moral reasons for their wars. They've always wanted just one more, "to end all wars." They've always grabbed, separately, everything in the way of spoils that they could get, after the war, and they've never surrendered one inch of what they got.

This Mothers' Legion must mount to a membership of two million to be able to wield the influence we want to have it wield. We're well on our way to that two million already. We probably will make it five million. Five million votes will swing any candidate to victory in 1940; half that number will. We want all our representatives, and especially our Chief Executive, to pledge us their solemn word that under no pressure, under no circumstances, under no threats that "we will be next," will we ever engage again in foreign wars. We want to be so organized that if our people in Washington fail us, and go back on their promises, we can impeach them.

Don't wait, if you want to help. Don't wait until propaganda has done its deadly work, and the bands begin to play, and the service flags begin to mount upon village flag poles, and the boys of your family come in casually to lunch and say, "I'm in, mom. I just signed up. I go to report on Monday."

War Preys on Youth.

Youth won't wait. It is one of the devilish subtleties of war that it wants our sons just when they are a little at loose ends; out of school, plugging along in dull jobs, old enough to make their own decisions, young enough to love excitement and change.

There are no dues in the Mothers' Legion. Its simple purpose is to enlist the power of women everywhere to keep us out of foreign wars; to influence other nations toward peace; to resist un-American activities in our midst; to maintain adequate home defense in the interest of peace, not war. Some of the most prominent men and women in the country are already enthusiastic promotors of it. Churchmen of all denominations, the American Legion, women's clubs and social organizations are with us.

You be with us, too. Watch your paper for notice of the chapter that is shortly to be formed in your town, and then, if someday war does come, at least you can say to the boy you love: "I'm sorry, son. Your father and I did everything we could to keep this terrible thing away from you."

Star Dust

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

MOVIE stars who don't take a turn at radio are scarcer than hen's teeth these days. ZaSu Pitts, who has done a number of guest appearances on the air, is serving a thirteen-weeks term on a daily serial, "Big Sister," playing a character part. And Aileen Pringle is playing a newspaper woman on another serial, "Joyce Jordan—Girl Interne."

Ilka Chase isn't bothering with serials; she is coming out into the open and being herself, in a program sponsored by a cigarette company It is something new in radio—a program about the woman's world, the world of the theater, fashion, current events and society, and it is called "Luncheon at the Waldorf."

Each Saturday Miss Chase entertains 50 guests at this very smart hotel They are people prominent in journalistic, theatrical and fashion fields, and one of them is interviewed during each broadcast. If the guests are as witty as Miss Chase is the program should speedily reach top rating. You've heard her as the commentator on those fashion films of Vyvyan Donner's, made for Twentieth Century-Fox; you've also seen her on the screen.

When Joan Fontaine and Brian Aherne were married a short time ago there was no time for a honeymoon trip; she was working in "Rebecca," and he was busy with "My Son, My Son" But he had time to plan what he considered a perfect trip; they had been asked to appear together in a stage play, and they'd hop from one city to another in his plane, having a fine time. Mrs. Aherne agreed.

Brian Aherne

But — he took her down to Del Monte in the plane to see some friends On the way home they ran into chilly weather. When they landed at the airport, she announced that her nose was practically frozen, and she'd take no long trips in the open cockpit of that plane.

Joan Fontaine

Nothing daunted, Aherne promptly turned the plane in and ordered a cabin monoplane. Then the play was called off until autumn, and the tour of the country was shortened to a trip to New York, where they plan to remain until the first of May. During their stay their recent pictures will be shown at the Music Hall, which is a nice wedding present in itself.

Incidentally, Edward Small is practically snowed under by letters from young men who want to portray Rudolph Valentino in the picture based on the life of the Great Lover. About 10,000 letters and photographs have already arrived, as a result of Small's announcement that he intends to use an unknown player in the role.

Jean Hersholt has completed production on his second "Dr. Christian" movie. He formed his own motion picture company to film the story of "Dr. Christian," a role which he has played on the air for three years, until it is now one of the most popular dramatic broadcasts on the air. Hersholt will soon start looking for a site upon which a home for aged and disabled actors will be built; he is president of the Motion Picture Relief fund, and the money for the home comes from the movie stars' own program, "The Screen Guild Show," to which they donate their talent.

—*—

ODDS AND ENDS—Janet Logan, Paramount starlet, first attracted the attention of a talent scout because of her beautiful clothes (she is really one of Hollywood's best dressed girls); yet in her first feature picture she wears an old fashioned bed sheet draped into a coverall.

¶ The CBS sound man on "Grand Hotel" has two eyes on Betty Lou Gerson's pet bracelet, one is for keeping it off her wrist during broadcasts, the other covets it for filing under "sleigh-bells effects."

¶ Howard Hughes has given a completely equipped ambulance to the Canadian Red Cross for its No. 1 base hospital in England.

¶ And Katharine Hepburn is helping him to find an actress who will be as great a "discovery" as Jean Harlow.

¶ Gene Autrey, the cowboy star of screen and radio, likes to fly, except when it's time to go to bed. He always travels in full cowboy regalia. It's hard enough to remove cowboy boots under the most favorable circumstances; when he climbs into a sleeper berth on a plane, he can't take his boots off. He's either got to stop flying or stop wearing cowboy clothes when he travels.

SEWING CIRCLE

IT'S a button-front style (1902-B) which is one thing decidedly to recommend it, and this suave, simple dress has lots of other good points, too. It can be made with plain v-neckline and edged with bias fold. Or it can be made with a narrow roll collar as its only trimming. Sleeves are either short or three-quarter length. It's simple and unhampering enough for house wear, in gingham, linen or chambray; also tailored enough for the street, in thin wool, flat crepe or small-figured print.

It has just the detailing you like, if you have size to consider--a bodice deftly gathered for correct bust fit, beneath a smooth shoulder-yoke, a slim-hipped skirt, and a waistline drawn in by a sash bow or buckled belt. Everything about it is slenderizing as well as smart.

Barbara Bell Pattern No 1902-B is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50, and 52 Size 38 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material without nap; with short sleeves; 4⅜ yards with three-quarter; 3¼ yards braid or bias fold, or ½ yard contrast for collar.

For a pattern of this attractive model send 15 cents in coin, your name, address, style, number and size to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1324, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill.

THE KLEMME TIMES

VOLUME 44 — KLEMME, IOWA WEDNESDAY EVENING, MARCH 13, 1940. — NUMBER 41

Four Hundred Thirty Attended The Triple A Program And Banquet

GOOD MUSICAL PROGRAM GIVEN IN VARIETY OF NUMBERS

Aims And Program Of AAA Given By Several Farmers

The Triple A banquet and program held in Klemme last Friday evening commemorating the founding of the AAA was pronounced a great success by those in charge of the entertainment and other arrangements.

Some over four hundred and thirty people were seated at long tables in the Klemme high school gymnasium and enjoyed a well prepared banquet served by the ladies of the Klemme Reformed Church.

Rudy Bienert, of near Forest City, was chairman of the evening and kept the program moving along smoothly.

A varied program provided high class entertainment for the large crowd: Music by the K. H. S. Sextet; Solo by Elsie Thieman; Violin Selections by Jacqueline Kudje; Music by Garner Quartette; Whistling by a Forest City lady; Marimba Solo by Irene Becker.

The Hancock County Committee, Alfred Josten, Tony Rasmussen and Miller Townsend were introduced, and a talk by the latter.

More entertainment followed with a violin solo by Clint Daniels; Duet by Mrs. Dulmes and Mrs. Gerardi.

F. Knudson, of Kanawha, then appeared on the program and gave an interesting talk on the functioning of the AAA, explaining its origin from back in 1933.

Irene and Arlene Schmidt gave an accordion duet which was followed by a talk by Ben V. Greiman.

A national program from Washington via radio was then enjoyed and talks by President Roosevelt and Farley were heard. The meeting was closed with the singing of "America".

M. E. Aid Next Week

The regular monthly meeting of the Aid will be held next Thursday at the church parlors. There will be a new quilt on, so come early, quilters. The hostesses are: Mrs. C. A. Larsen, Mrs. F. G. Koerner, and Mrs. A. J. Kudje. Bring rags for the sewinb committee.

Double Four Club Meets

Mrs. Ed Buntenbach was hostess to the Double Four bridge club last Wednesday afternoon at her home. Bridge was played, and Mrs. Stanley Thada won high, while Mrs. Orville Bridges won second high. Mrs. Dorance Day was a guest. A lovely lunch was served.

about TREES

FARMERS NEED TO PREPARE LAND FOR TREES TO BENEFIT

Farmers who wish to benefit under the tree planting provisions of the 1940 Agricultural Conservation program should see that the soil is carefully prepared before or at the time of planting, says G. B. MacDonald, professor of forestry at Iowa State College.

Areas with a heavy sod or other vegetative cover should have this vegetation removed in such a way as to allow each tree a space of 13 inches or more in diameter relatively free from competing vegetation.

Plow On Contour

"This will give the newly planted trees a much better opportunity for getting a start," MacDonald said. "Plowed furrows in all cases following contour lines, are sometimes used to reduce the cost of planting."

Farmers wanting to plant forest trees under the soil building provisions are eligible to purchase stock from the federal nurseries in the state. Tress from these nurseries are available at the approximate cost of production.

Apply To State Forester

It is permissible also to plant shrubs, bushes, or small trees suitable for wildlife food or protective cover for game birds. The species for Iowa are: June Berry, ash (mountain, prickly or wafer), bladdernut, cherry (choke or pin), dogwood, hawthornes, ironwood, dwarf juniper, mountain maple, paw paw, wild plum, prairie crab apple, red bud, sassafras, sumac and wahoo.

Planters who desire to obtain stock from the cooperative nurseries should send in to the State Forester at Ames for application forms which will indicate the kinds of trees available, the prices at which they may be obtained and the conditions under which they are provided for planting

If landowners expect to have success at the end of the growing season, all grazing animals must be kept out of the plantations, MacDonald said.

Letter.

At Malcom, eight year old Walter Winchell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Winchell, fell and broke his arm. Sometime afterward he received the following letter: Dear Walter Winchell: A mutual friend sent me a clipping from the Grinnell Herald-Register about your accident. I am very sorry to learn of it and hope you are feeling better by now Good wishes. (Signed) Walter Winchell."

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

The good old days when cows roamed Fifth Avenue, grog was a penny a swig and the Astors and the Roosevelts were just starting on their way, return to the screen in the robust, lust romantic and entertaining drama at the Avery Theatre, Sunday Mar 17, Darryl F Zanuck's production of "Little Old New York" The cast of this Fox picture includes Alice Faye, Fred MacMurray, Richard Greene, Brenda Joyce, Andy Devine, Henry Stephenson and Fritz Feld The film is replete with such fascinating elements as fist fights and weddings, ships set afire, cracked skulls, kissed girls, dancing, grog and song There's historical significance in it too, as we see the struggle of Robert Fulton (played by Richard Greene) to build and launch the world's first steamboat, the famous "Clermont" There's a headlong, headstrong tempstuous love interest as well, when Alice Faye, as a barmaid belle of the waterfront fights the whole town to own the heart and share the glory of a man like Robert Fulton

Shot Foot.

Albert Wibben, of Burt, was given an unusual "hot foot" during a butchering session there. A bullet went through a pig and on into Mr Wibben's foot, lodging in the sole of his foot.

New Super-Distance Air 'Dreadnaught' Will Fly Non-Stop, New York-to-Rome

WASHINGTON.—On March 15, if the civil aeronautics authority permits, a new air service will be inaugurated between New York and Rome under sponsorship of American Export airlines.

Competing with Pan-American clippers which went into service last spring, the new airline will be but the precursor to an even faster service which American Export lines will start early in 1941.

Patterned After Navy Plane.

For the time being it is planned to carry only mail and express in a two-motor Consolidated flying boat which will run from New York to the Azores, to Lisbon and thence to Rome. But the new airships now being built by Vought-Sikorsky are expected to usher in a new era of trans-oceanic aviation, flying non-stop from New York to Rome.

These giant ships are called "dreadnaughts," for they are nothing less than a commercial version of the American navy's newest long-range flying dreadnaught. The ships will have no trouble carrying a full pay load 4,600 miles non-stop, flying at a maximum rate of 230 miles an hour, and at a cruising speed of 175 miles.

Slightly smaller than the Pan-American clippers, which carry 21 passengers, the Vought-Sikorsky ships will accommodate 16 paying guests plus a crew of 11 and a substantial load of mail and express. They will provide every modern improvement with palatial sleeping accommodations, an attractive lounge and separate dressing rooms for men and women.

American Export lines believe the non-stop schedule embodies many advantages, providing greater reliability of service and eliminating the hazards of landing in unprotected harbors.

New York to Rome Overnight.

Speed will be an important factor. Passengers will be able to cross the Atlantic in only a little more time than it now requires to go by train from New York to Chicago. Leaving New York in the morning, the ships will be in Italy the next afternoon Fast scheduled rail and air connections available at Rome will put the traveler and mail into Paris, London, Berlin, Budapest and other important European cities the same evening or the following morning—36 to 40 hours out of New York.

Co-operating with Igor Sikorsky in designing the ship is Michael E. Gluhareff, chief of design for United Aircraft corporation. The dreadnaught, already thoroughly tested by the United States navy, has a wing span of 124 feet, an overall hull length of 79 feet, 3 inches, and a maximum hull beam of 10 feet. Three separate tanks concealed in the wings will carry 3,900 gallons of fuel, making the non-stop flight across the Atlantic entirely feasible. The ship will be powered with four engines producing 1,200 horsepower each.

Slide Rule Makes Black Magic For Latest Cinematic Thriller

An example of Ernest Schoedsack's magic: One of the "little people" is trampled under the huge boot of "Dr. Cyclops."

HOLLYWOOD.—The black magic of a masterful photographic technician named Ernest Schoedsack is being brought to the screen this year in a motion picture expected to set a new record for weirdness.

People reduced to one-fifth their normal size are the main characters in "Dr. Cyclops," an exciting film which takes place in a scientist's jungle camp at the headwaters of the Amazon. It is Schoedsack's major cinema since he excited the world several years ago with "King Kong," the giant ape.

Aided by a newly developed color process which gives special impact to the shadowy but colorful jungle, the movie tells the story of a malevolent scientist and five people who had come to help him but were repaid by being dwarfed to less than one-fifth their original size

Process Is a Secret.

How Schoedsack accomplishes this feat is a secret he has attempted to keep within a small circle of trusted assistants. For four months, during production of the picture, not a soul was allowed inside the sets unless directly connected with the film.

Thus the "Dr. Cyclops" characters are placed in a strange world where objects and animals once commonplace now assume terrifying proportions. Chickens, cats and dogs have become monsters capable of dealing death. An alligator they encounter assumes the dimensions of a nightmarish giant reptile out of a prehistoric era. The simplest little tasks—when they were normal—now become stupendously difficult. For example, it is almost impossible to lift a plate or open a door.

Uses Slide Rule.

Uncanny therefore, are the scenes where "Dr. Cyclops" hunts his dwarfed victims with a bird net, where he catches one and holds him securely in the grip of one hand, and where one of the "little people" is cornered and faces the enemy with a table knife for defense.

A large slide rule was one of Schoedsack's most valuable assistants in making the picture. Certain sets showed the "little people" in a room of ordinary furniture which loomed far above their heads. A chair, to them, had the dimensions of a tall building, and a door seemed larger than a cliff.

How did Schoedsack do it? Certainly he couldn't really reduce the cast to one-fifth their normal dimensions. Painstakingly, giant sets were created Every article was enlarged five times its normal size

Even this was only a part of Schoedsack's wizardry Giant sets do not explain how "Dr. Cyclops" could hold another human in the palm of his hand or catch two or three people with the swoop of a butterfly net

Used X-ray in One Scene.

Schoedsack refuses to divulge much of his camera magic. Those are the trade secrets he has worked out laboriously over many years. But some details have leaked out.

For example, a scene was photographed in which an actor actually decayed before the camera.

Platina, New Fox Fur, Resulted From Freak

A freak fox born on a farm in Norway in 1933 has given the industry something new to think about and a new kind of fur to sell.

Although the little fox was rejected at the Norwegian silver fox show that year, fur experts now know that Nature has performed another miracle by giving the world a new kind of fur.

Justice Department Gears for Biggest Tax Case in History

CHICAGO.—In the racy parlance of the gambling fraternity, one day soon the government will be off on a fast track here to the trial of Moses L. Annenberg and his henchmen in the late fabulous race wire information empire.

Especially stream-lined court procedure will speed the Annenberg trial, biggest income tax evasion case ever tried by the department of justice, to the barrier while the horse parlor habitues of the nation watch the event. Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson will preside. Already the fast pace of justice in this federal action, as compared to historic trials of similar nature in the past, has the 50 or more distinguished counsel for the defense literally pop-eyed.

William J. Campbell

The Annenberg case involves 19 individuals and corporations, seven indictments involving the laws against lotteries and a perjury charge. Batteries of accountants both for the government and the defense are at work on the records of two score Annenberg companies, impounded and guarded 24 hours a day.

In less than three months the defense filed 97 different motions, briefs and legal memoranda.

United States Attorney William J. Campbell at Chicago and his assistants have filed answer to this mass of legal documents written by defense counsel in the income tax cases, as well as in the lottery indictments against Annenberg. Outnumbered by defense lawyers, the government, with its limited staff, has never once demanded time out for breathing or to catch up with the pitching, although the defense has put everything into their legal delivery that could be doped out.

In addition to answering the defense tit for tat in its pleas and motions, the government has filed various motions and memoranda of its own in this legal battle of the century. Hundreds of thousands of words already have been incorporated in the record to date. Neither the defense nor the government is leaving any page unturned in preparing the case.

Prosecutor Campbell has said he and his aides are ready. And the "boys in the back rooms" have started making bets on the outcome.

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT ALLEN

The recent Republican national committee meeting in Washington gave no indication of a swing to any one G. O. P. presidential candidate, but party chieftains have made up their minds about the man they will have to beat in November.

The G. O. P. high command now is going seriously on the assumption that President Roosevelt will seek a third term and is mapping campaign plans accordingly. This was the keynote of the national committee meeting here, the specter that haunted every discussion behind closed doors, over luncheon tables, tavern bars and in hotel lobbies.

Omens which have influenced this conclusion in the minds of party leaders are: First—the President's switching of the Thanksgiving date. G. O. P. heavy thinkers argue that in breaking this "sacred" tradition, Roosevelt was "conditioning" the voting public for the overturn of another.

Second—the "weak sister" type of Democratic candidates being promoted as Roosevelt successors. Some G. O. P.-ers believe that Hull, McNutt, et al, are "clay pigeon" candidates put up for purposes of "unflattering comparison" with the President.

Another third term harbinger raised in executive session of the national committee is the "waning hope for peace" in Europe, which plays right into the hands of third term advocates.

All state delegations at the Republican national committee meeting voted en bloc during the balloting for a convention city, except South Carolina.

"Tieless Joe" Tolbert of Ninety Six, S. C., most colorful figure at the meeting, voted for Chicago while his daughter, Julia Tolbert, a national committeewoman, cast her ballot for Philadelphia.

Joe Pew, Pennsylvania's oil magnate G. O. P. boss, was boasting about the advantages the Republican convention will bring to Philadelphia.

"We'd a thousand times rather play host to the Republicans than the Democrats," he said. "Republican convention delegates are better heeled on the whole than the Democrats and spend three times as much money. Democratic delegates are usually poor boys who have to watch their pocketbooks."

The friend expressed surprise, in view of the distance and the slippery condition of the streets.

"But you see," replied the justice, "in my job, I have to sit a good deal, and I need to walk for variety."

A NAME FOR THE MOTHER-IN-LAW

"Did you see," asked Senator Dumm, "where a group of women recently voted for a change in the term 'mother-in-law'?"

"I did," replied Representative Dummer. "They voted to change it to kin-mother, the big sillies."

"The foolish season is here ahead of time," said the senator, "and winter must be nearly over. There are many names I could call the old girl, but kin-mother is not among 'em."

"What was the big idea, anyhow?" asked Dummer. "Were the mothers-in-law complaining?"

"Mothers-in-law are always complaining," snapped the senator. "Do you see this bruise over my eye?"

"I do," said Dummer. "How come?"

"From walking up to my wife's old lady and saying, 'Hello, kin-mother'; that's how I got it. She thought I said something else, and when I tried to explain she said mother-in-law was good enough for her, and it would have to be good enough for me."

"I noticed that there were many other names suggested before the final vote," said Dummer.

"One of 'em was 'Blitzkrieg Mother,'" laughed the senator. "I rather liked that one. It will linger in my memory long after I have forgotten all about 'kin-mother.' But do you know what I think is called for now?"

"No."

"A new name for mothers-in-law to call their sons-in-law and daughters-in-law."

"Haven't our mothers-in-law enough names for them already?" asked Dummer.

"I mean something printable; something that can be used in polite society," argued the senator.

"How about asking her to call you a kin-son?" asked Dummer.

"She would retaliate by calling me a kin-bum and say she misunderstood me," barked Senator Dumm.

"Couldn't she just call you a kin-guy or a kin-sap?" asked Dummer.

"She might be glad to," said the senator.

"Will anything come of the whole business?" asked Dummer.

"Nothing whatever," declared Senator Dumm. "A man never refers to his mother-in-law as his mother-in-law, anyhow. He either calls her 'that woman,' 'old ironsides,' 'the crackdown' or 'the family static.'"

"Do you know what I call mine?" asked Dummer.

"What?"

"The Roman Galley," declared Dummer.

"Why?" asked the senator, a bit puzzled.

"Because she is always putting in her oar," concluded Representative Dummer, dodging a chair.

"Let's Play Authors," Says Uncle Sam, And He's Giving Us a New Series of Postage Stamps to Help Us Do That!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

REMEMBER back in the "good old days" when you used to play "authors"?

It was a card game, you recall, but it wasn't the kind that some puritanical folk frowned upon because there was a taint of gambling attached to it. Instead, your parents and your teachers encouraged you to play it because they considered it "educational" — it familiarized you with the names of the great literary figures of the world and the novels and poems and stories that they had written.

Well, your Uncle Samuel recently decided that it might be a good thing to revive that old-fashioned game. At least, he decided that we Americans ought to become more familiar with some of the great literary figures in our own past so he's started a variation on the old game of authors on a nation-wide scale. You don't "play" it with pasteboards. You "play" it with stamps, which your Uncle Samuel manufactures and sells you (at a very good profit to himself, incidentally).

All of which is by way of calling your attention to a new series of "Famous Americans" stamps which the United States post office department is issuing this year. The first set in the series was issued the last part of January and the first part of February; a second set was issued in February; a third will be placed on sale this month and each month until November will see a new group of American notables being honored by having their faces appear on a new set of stamps.

It so happens that the first of the seven groups which will be issued this year displayed the faces of five famous authors and the second the countenances of five famous poets—hence the statement at the beginning of the article that Uncle Sam was asking us to "play authors" with him by buying these new stamps for use on our letters. As a matter of fact, he's going to honor other "Famous Americans," too—educators, scientists, composers, artists and inventors.

Last November Postmaster General Farley announced that there was to be a new series of "Famous Americans" which would be composed of peace-time heroes, instead of military and naval heroes, or statesmen. Anticipating possible criticism by some people in regard to the selection of the men and women whose portraits were to appear on the stamps of different values, Mr. Farley pointed out that the selection of the various denominations, which include a one- two, three, five and ten-cent stamp for each of the seven stamps of the series, was to be governed by the date of birth of the 35 famous Americans in this new series.

In other words, the lowest denomination in each of the seven groups was assigned to that particular American notable whose date of birth precedes that of all others appearing in this particular group, with the notable of the most recent birth being awarded the highest denomination. This chronological birth order has been followed throughout the new series.

Thus, no one who believes that Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was a greater poet than James Whitcomb Riley can object because the face of the Hoosier bard appears on a stamp of higher value than that bearing the portrait of the New Englander. The fact that Longfellow was born in 1807 and Riley in 1853 was the determining factor in placing the picture of the former on the one-cent stamp and the fact of the latter on the 10-cent.

Similarly those who love the songs of Stephen Collins Foster can't object because his picture is on a one-cent stamp, whereas those of Edward A. MacDowell and Ethelbert Nevin, of whom they may never have heard, are on the five-cent and the 10-cent stamps, respectively. Of course, it may seem rather silly that Uncle Sam, as represented by his postmaster-general, has to be so very careful to avoid the slightest suspicion of partisanship in such a matter as this. But it's amazing what queer notions people have sometimes, and they've raised a veritable "tempest in a teapot" over lesser matters than this.

Having chosen his list of authors, poets, educators, scientists, composers, artists and inventors to appear on his new series of stamps, Uncle Sam next decided on the places for "first days," i e., where each of these stamps were first to be sold. In every case the home town of the notable or some place closely associated with his career was chosen.

Thus on January 29 the green one-cent stamp bearing the portrait of Washington Irving was placed on sale at Tarrytown, N. Y. On the same day the post office at Cooperstown, N. Y., began selling the red-two cent stamps bearing a likeness of the author of the "Leatherstocking Tales"—James Fenimore Cooper. On February 5 the Ralph Waldo Emerson stamp (three-cent, purple) was first sold in Boston and the Louisa May Alcott stamp (five-cent, blue) in Concord, Mass. On February 13 the memory of Samuel Langhorne Clemens (Mark Twain, to most Americans) was again honored at Hannibal, Mo., with the first day sale of a new 10-cent brown stamp.

Thus Uncle Sam started his new "game" of authors and he continued it during February by issuing the five stamps in the poet group, as follows: February 16, the Henry W. Longfellow stamp (one-cent, green) was first sold at Portland, Maine, and the John Greenleaf Whittier stamp (two-cent, red) at Haverhill, Mass.; February 20 the James Russell Lowell (three-cent, purple) at Cambridge, Mass., and the Walt Whitman (five-cent, blue) at Camden, N J.; February 24, the James Whitcomb Riley (10-cent, brown) at Greenfield, Ind.

Beginning this month with the educators' group the stamps will be placed on sale as follows:

Educators.

March 14—Boston, Horace Mann, one-cent, green.

March 14 — Williamstown, Mass., Mark Hopkins, two-cent, red.

March 28—Cambridge, Mass., Charles W. Eliot, three-cent, purple.

Americans' interest in stamps has been greatly stimulated by the number of commemorative and special issues put out by the post office department in recent years. Another stimulus—but for a different reason—has been furnished by a book, "Fabulous Stamps: The Romance of the Rarities," written by John W. Nicklin and published by Hastings House of New York. Here are two stories from that volume which indicate the reason for an increase interest in old stamps:

The Widow's Mite.

In the year of our Lord 1896, the Rev. F. P. L. Josa served as pastor at Christ church, the Episcopal house of worship at Georgetown, British Guiana. The parish was in dire need of funds to further certain charitable works that were dear to the heart of the beloved cleric.

A certain widow, long a supporter of Christ church, felt a deep urge to assist the charitable work in which the Reverend Josa was engaged, but was unfortunately without financial resources to devote to this worthy purpose. "What else might I contribute from my meager possessions?" she wondered. "Those old letters, perhaps? That visitor from the old country had said years ago that they were of some value. Especially that one letter bearing a pair of circular stamps they had used for a time in Georgetown when I was but a girl."

And so, on the following Sunday, the widow of Georgetown placed in the collection plate of Christ church an old and faded letter bearing two copies of the two-cent British Guiana stamp of 1850. The Reverend Josa later sold these to a E. C. Luard for a sum in excess of $1,000. The good work went on—the widow's mite had accomplished far greater good than she had hoped it would. Everyone was pleased, especially Mr. Luard, who subsequently parted with his purchase at a handsome profit. This widow's letter has an approximate present valuation of $30,000, a sum sufficient to build an entire church.

Treasure in a Cornfield.

In 1925 a stamp hunter was working on a clue he had unearthed concerning an old bank whose records he believed to be in existence in the general vicinity of Baltimore.

After a painstaking search he was chagrined to learn that the bank in question had been out of business over 50 years and its records long since destroyed. He learned, however, that there was a family of the same name in a country district not far distant.

So he went to the farm of the family believing there was small chance to find any old stamps in a place so abandoned as the district appeared to be.

Upon reaching the general vicinity of his destination he had the farm in question pointed out to him. As he turned his steps without enthusiasm toward the old farm house he noticed that it was flanked by several small outbuildings. When the path he was following brought him abreast of the first of these, he noticed a few bits of paper scattered about the ground just near the edge of an adjoining field. Stooping, he picked up the first. It was a letter. Turning it over, he was amazed to see that it contained on its face a five-cent Baltimore stamp, worth about $1,000.

Hardly believing his senses, he remained rooted to the spot, staring at the bit of paper in his hand. He hardly noticed that the lady of the house had been approaching and now stood before him. Trying to hide his great excitement he asked if he might look through the old papers that lay scattered before them.

"Surely," said the lady, "they come from the old granary. We are clearing it out and are destroying the old papers of grandfather. They are no use to us now. In fact, half of them have been burned up already."

The net result of the ensuing search was a total of eight more five-cent Baltimore stamps and a number of other valuable specimens of lesser rarity, chiefly of the 1847 general United States issue.

The house cleaning so fortunately interrupted had proceeded to such an extent that about half of the papers had already been destroyed. What did these contain? More five-cent Buchanans, perhaps a few of the rare 10-cent stamps. Who can tell?

SHAMROCKS WON MORE THAN A TROPHY

Not only did the Klemme Shamrocks bring home a trophy from the sectional basket ball tournament held at Dows . they brought back something far more valuable than that They brought praises for their fine sports and for being gentlemen and ghost type on the basket floor

One of the officials m talking with the Dows superintendent made the remark that during all his years of refereeing he had never before met up with a group of basket ball players that were better mannered and courteous than the Klemme Shamrocks He made special mention of the captain of the team, Dorance Grange The official stated that the Klemme captain always replied with a polite "Yes, Sir," "No, Sir," and was always ready to give his full cooperation regarding the games

Those twelve Shamrocks on the ornament squad won far more than a Trophy! Hats Off to them Coach Bowles for having more than just a winning team.

NO MARBLE PLAYERS HERE?

During the twenty some odd years the writer has been a resident of Klemme he has never seen a group of small boys, in early spring, looking for a dry spot where they can "knuckle down" for a game of that Great American sport marbles

In thousands of communities today you will find small rings of small boys playing How come the "bee' has nipped the youth of Klemme I think the younger boys are missing out on a great sport playing marbles

Well, can I remember the commotion caused in the school room about this time of year when Johnny would maybe lean back too far in his seat and the marbles would spill out of his pants pocket That meant stay after school and miss a few games of marbles Maybe the hard-hearted teacher would confiscate the assortment of Johnnie's commies, glassies, agates and shooters and that was a real tragedy!

Playing of marbles might have an gambling but it was a of fun! Try it boys.

One of the public opinion poll must have taken a survey on when the public feels it should lightened on the third term issue Some of the national writers say the public's answer is a foregone conclusion that the people are not being fooled by the current subterfuge attending the issue One writer, who has leaned toward the New Deal, says the campaign for a third term is going to cause him to state he has been giving the wrong side the benefit of the doubt for seven years. The subterfuge comes in when an official attitude of silence is betrayed by the widespread sub-official clamor One Iowa senator, for instance returned to Iowa not long ago with a press statement written out Paid to represent Iowa in Washington he wanted to reverse the procedure and tell Iowans what the Washington new dealers thought He said they thought the third term was inevitable.

India Leads Entire World In Irrigated Land Area

With an irrigated area totaling some 50,000,000 acres—more than twice the irrigated acreage of her nearest competitor, the United States—India affords the most emphatic illustration of the extent to which man has been able to alter natural disposition of waters in order to assist agriculture.

Of the many powerful works which have been erected for this purpose, the barrage at Sukkur on the Indus river—officially known as the Lloyd Barrage and Canals construction scheme—is the most spectacular recent development. Commanding a gross area 7,500,000 acres, of which 6,250,000 are cultivable, the entire scheme when completed represents an expenditure of some $72,000,000—an earthwork of about 279,000,000 cubic yards to supply dependable flow through a network of canals and field channels amounting to some 52,600 miles

The barrage itself resembles a two-level bridge rather than a dam Between the piers supporting the platforms are swung 50-ton steel gates, electrically operated, to check the flow of the Indus, raising the water level on the upstream side and thus supplying the six enormous trunk canals, three on each bank, which run on down into Sind and the Khairpur state The barrage and head regulators consist of a low masonry dam of 66 spans of 60 feet each, making a total length of about a mile

The floodgates of the new system were opened in 1932; prior to that time some of the canals had already been in operation and construction of further works has continued since then. This harnessing of the mighty Indus, in which as many as 60,000 men have been employed at one time, is expected to bring into use a section of northwest India a quarter the area of England, or a half million acres larger than the entire cultivated area of Egypt.

The new channels flow through a desert area in which rich soil from 40 to 90 feet in depth is covered by a thin layer of sand which in some places is blown up into hills. Gradual leveling of these hills through wind action will improve the productivity of the intervening land by increasing its lightness.

Moropus Called Stupid Animal of Miocene Age

Big, stupid fellow with a hea like that of a rhinoceros, a body like that of a horse and funny fee with huge claws, resembling somewhat those which would have been needed by a bear so gigantic that none like it has ever lived, for all o this, which describes a fossil animal placed on exhibition at the Field Museum of Natural History, in Chicago, there has been derived from the language of the Greeks the name moropus.

Moropus cooki, as the creature's full scientific name reads, gets its "surname" or species name from Capt. James Cook, an Indian scout now more than 80 years old, upon whose ranch at Agate Springs, Sioux county, Neb., the skeleton was found In addition to the skeleton which has been re-assembled at the museum by James H. Quinn, of the paleontological staff, the museum has on display a large mural painting, by Charles R. Knight, in which the animal is restored as scientific research indicates it must have appeared in life.

The grotesque moropus lived in the Miocene age, about 20,000,000 years ago, according to Elmer S Riggs, curator of paleontology Only a limited number of specimens have been found in sandstone formation of Nebraska and Wyoming.

'Merry-Go-Round' Windows

Window shoppers and pedestrians are going to see a good many lively shows on America's "main streets" in the not-too-distant future- and there'll be no admission charge Merchants will soon be displaying their wares on "merry-go-round" stages which will carry a stream of merchandise in and out of show windows, Harold M. Alexander of Toledo, industrial architect, told a meeting of the Illuminating Engineering society in Philadelphia. Along with this prediction, Alexander said there would be slow but sure elimination of the "garish lights and discordant signs of America's main streets" and he forecast an era in which "harmonious blending of business-street architecture and luminous storefronts of structural glass will make window shopping an artistic treat instead of a nightmare of confusing, loud color

Piston Action

The bureau of standards says that the piston in an engine travels farther, and therefore faster, while the crank pin is moving over the upper half than over the lower half of the crank circle. This is because the crank pin in moving around the crank circle has a horizontal (sidewise) component as well as a vertical (up and down) component to its motion. When the crank pin is moving on the upper half of the crank circle, both of these components act to move the piston in the same direction, causing a relatively large and rapid motion When the crank pin is moving on the lower half of the crank circle the components act to move the piston in opposite directions, producing a relatively small and slow motion.

Honored.

The police station at Waterloo has been honored A picture of a special guest, Billy Goodfellow, has been done in oils and presented to the station. Mr. Goodfellow has been arrested 149 times on drunkenness charges. Only once did he plead "not guilty", which so startled officials that they dropped the charges and let him go free. Now, during the intervals when Mr Goodfellow is not residing in the jail, policemen may see his picture looking down at them from the jailhouse walls and be comforted thereby.

YOUR DUTY

(In the style of Walt Whitman)
Fires burn brightest, and longest,
When they are kindled - and re-kindled.

Love is a fire that can smolder,
Or flame
If it is rekindled with kind words
Good deeds and courtesies, it will burn bright.
If faulty memory enters in,
It dies out.

It's so easy to remember,—
So hurtful to forget.

—Marjorie Lemke

A FLOWING LIFE

As I rock to and fro,
I see the travelers, come and go.
Love, Joy, and Sorrow pass my door,
How could I see or look for more?

I look for tags from other states,
Each truck or car, a tale relates,
While life keeps flowing past my door,
I'll not ask or look for more

—Betty Nuehring

Are "left-overs" a problem in your household? They needn't be! There are clever, unusual ways of using them. Next week Eleanor Howe will give you some of her own favorite recipes and suggestions for using odds and ends of vegetables and meats, and even a hint or two for using stale cake and pie.

add a few quartered marshmallows and fold until melted. This dressing will be sweeter and fluffier than the original and is perfectly delightful to keep on hand for fruit salads of all kinds.

Angel Food Snowballs.
(Makes 16)

½ cup milk
2 tablespoons butter
1 cup sugar
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
4 egg whites
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Heat milk and butter to scalding point. Add sugar and dissolve. Sift flour, baking powder and salt, and combine with the milk and sugar mixture. Beat well. Beat egg whites until frothy, add cream of tartar, and beat until the egg whites stand up in points. Fold into the batter and add vanilla. Pour into greased muffin pans and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for about 20 minutes.

St. Patrick's Lime Pie.
(Serves 6)

4 eggs (separated)
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon flour
¼ cup lime juice
Pastry cut in shamrock shapes and baked
Rind of one lime (grated)
Green vegetable coloring
½ teaspoon salt
1 baked pie shell

Beat the egg yolks until thick and light-colored. Mix ½ cup of the sugar and the flour, add lime juice and grated rind, and combine with the egg yolks. Cook until thick, over very low heat, stirring constantly. Cool. Add just enough green coloring to tint the filling slightly. Add salt to egg whites and beat until stiff; gradually add the remaining ¼ cup of sugar, and beat until very stiff. Fold into the yolk mixture and pour into baked pie shell. Place pastry shamrocks on top. Bake in a moderately hot oven (415 degrees) for 5 to 7 minutes, or until the filling is set. Cool.

St. Pat's 'Hats.'

Using a large round slice of bread (buttered) for a brim, build up a hat crown with a layer each of tunafish salad and sliced tomato, placed between 3 smaller bread circles. Stick a toothpick down through center. Spread entire sandwich with green-tinted cream cheese. Add green pepper hat band. Chill. Serve on shredded lettuce.

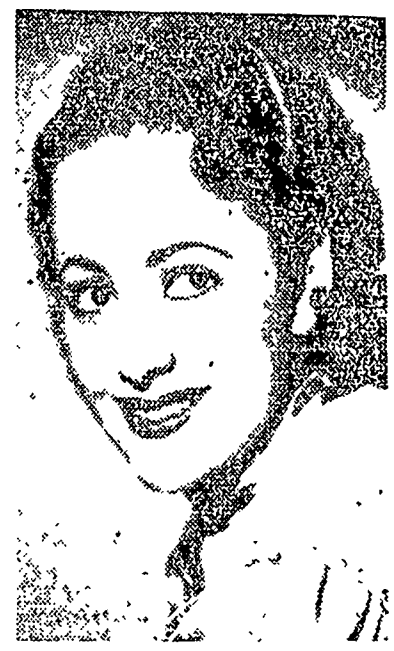
Star Dust
STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

BETTE DAVIS has always made it very clear that she had the courage of her convictions. She's prepared to back one of her pet theories with coin of the realm right now, and John Garfield, James Cagney and Pat O'Brien are ready to string along with her.

She believes that Hollywood could be made a theatrical center, since there is all sorts of talent on the coast, and she and her partners are prepared to form an organization for producing plays—and also to act in them. Plays that succeed will be sent along to Broadway.

Olivia De Haviland hadn't much more than settled her differences with Warner Brothers than she got into hot water again by refusing to work in "Flight 8," and was suspended again. Virginia Bruce was free, after cancellation of her Metro contract, so you'll see her as the heroine, opposite Ralph Bellamy. The lovely Olivia seems to know what she wants—the difficulty lies in getting it.



OLIVIA DE HAVILAND

Metro is prepared to shoot the works and give the public a treat in "Boom Town"; Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy, Claudette Colbert and Hedy Lamarr will have the leading roles, Jack Conway will direct, and John Lee Mahin adapted the story for the screen.

If you've tried to get "Swiss Family Robinson" at your local library lately you've probably been out of luck. Translated from the Swiss in 1820, the book is said still to be a best-seller, ranking second only to the Bible in gross sales. It had never been screened until RKO offered it to the public, and the picture has made the book more popular than ever.

Small boys—and their fathers as well—are likely to want to camp out in the theaters showing RKO's Pathe's Sportscope reel on baseball. It features the tactics and technique of such experts as Gabby Hartnett, Dizzy Dean, Joe Moore, Merrill May, Joe Medwick, Arky Vaughan and Paul Derringer. It's called "Pennant Chasers."

It's reunion on "Big Sister" for Alice Frost and Zasu Pitts. Alice broke into radio years ago by doing impersonations of Zasu, as taught her by Miss Pitts, a friend of the family.

Zasu Pitts

Erin O'Brien Moore will appear as Empress Carlotta, the role created by Bette Davis on the screen, when she is heard on the Star Theater in "Juarez and Maximillian" on March 13. Aherne will play Maximillian, as he did in the picture.

Anyone who says a magpie bit him, in explanation of a gash under the eye, can't expect to be believed—Al Pearce can swear to that. He has an aviary in his yard, and among the birds is a magpie. Pearce was holding the bird—which he calls Arlene Harris—and it snapped at him. That's his story, and he's sticking to it; but his gang, however, is enthusiastically giving him "the bird!"

ODDS AND ENDS . . . An eastern syndicate is negotiating with Lum and Abner for the right to portray their adventures in a newspaper cartoon series . . . Don Wilson is now plugging eleven different products on the air—and never getting them mixed! . . . Bill Powell was so determined not to do "Cyrano de Bergerac"—which Metro bought for him—that he refused to sign his new contract until a clause was inserted that protected him against it . . . Spencer Tracy accepted it without protest . . . "Pinocchio" is so good that it's hard to see how Walt Disney and his talented crew can ever do anything better.

CALVARY: TRIUMPH THROUGH SACRIFICE

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 27:33-50.
GOLDEN TEXT—He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.—Isaiah 53:3.

At Calvary, reverent and thoughtful readers of God's Word stand speechless, and confess themselves to be powerless to explain or to expound the awe-inspiring story, and yet just because it is such a story, because on that cross the divine Son of God gave Himself in sacrificial atonement for sin, we must do our utmost to understand it, to explain it, and certainly to declare it to all mankind. For when He who knew no sin became sin for us, it was for our sin that He died. Here alone do we find redemption.

We approach this scene therefore with reverence, and with the prayer that we may so present the dying Saviour to dying men that some may believe and be saved. We center our thoughts around three expressions taken from the text.

I. "They Crucified Him."

All of the gospel stories are remarkably reticent when they speak of the cross. Details of surrounding events are given, but when they speak of the cross itself, they can only say that He was crucified. Let us look at the One who hung on that sacred tree, for He is the Saviour of the world. Refusing the stupefying potion (v. 34) and facing death fully conscious, we hear Him crying out of the darkness which covered all the land, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" That cry indicates the depth to which our Saviour went for us.

Does it not seem that the Father in that darkest moment of history turned His back upon the One who knowing no sin Himself had become sin for us? And yet we know that it was God who hung upon the tree, God the Son. Here is divine mystery, the meaning of which we cannot fathom, but we know that it was for us.

Then came the cry with the loud voice, "It is finished!" This was not the death of the languishing martyr. The Son of God, having wrought out redemption on the cross, cried out in powerful tones of victory, "It is finished!" and yielded up His spirit.

II. "They Watched Him."

Soldiers, priests, the two thieves, the women—how different was the purpose and the spirit of their watching.

The soldiers had made sport of Him and mocked Him in the palace. They took a passing curious interest in the crucifixion. They gambled over His garments, and finally settled down to perform their duty as guards with stolid indifference. How much of humanity is just like that!

The priests who professed to know about God and His Word stand out in appalling wickedness and ignorance. Being members of the highest and noblest of callings, they fell when they sinned to the lowest depths.

Of the two thieves, one believed and the other railed at our Lord (Luke 23:39, 40). The cross has ever since been the dividing line, part of humanity turning there to life eternal, the rest going on its railing way to destruction.

The women waited. No doubt they were perplexed and troubled in heart, but they stood faithfully by until His precious body was in the grave. We read of no apostle who did as much, and we give all honor to the faithful women.

III. "He Trusted in God."

This was the sarcastic taunt of the priests. "When the King was hanging upon the cross and the interpreters of religion, the priests, misinterpreted God, there was a great silence. God's noninterference is the first thing that impresses one as the story is read, but that is not all the story. It was not wholly noninterference. 'From the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land until the ninth hour.' That seems to have been the act of God. It would seem that in infinite tenderness God wrapped the land in darkness in the hour of His Son's supreme suffering" (G. Campbell Morgan) We also read in verse 51 that the veil of the temple was torn from top to bottom, opening the way for all men in Christ to enter the Holy of Holies.

"He trusted God." Yes, even to the sacrifice of Himself in death. Because He could not save Himself (v. 42) in thus doing the will of God the Father, He did save others. The scoffing priests told the truth in spite of their wicked purpose to falsify. "They crucified Him," "they watched Him," but "He trusted God" and became the Saviour of the world

How Great and How Wondrous

How great are his signs! and how mighty are his wonders! His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation.—Daniel 4:3.

Patterns
SEWING CIRCLE

CHARMING and changeable are the words for this very simple princess frock (1898-B). Charming, because it is so slim-waisted and flare-skirted, with wide shoulders gathered at the top. Changeable, because you can make the neckline two ways—either with the round tailored collar, or with the collarless square neckline. As a matter of fact, if you once get it on, and see what nice things it does to your figure, you'll want it both ways, and make it up time and again, in street materials as well as in daytime cottons. It's a very adaptable style, too, becoming to misses' and women's sizes alike.

For home wear, choose crisp cottons like gingham, percale or calico For street or office wear, faille, fiat crepe or gay silk print will be pretty, with collar and cuffs of pique, linen or sharkskin.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1898-B is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 (34) requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material without nap; ⅝ yard contrast.

Cooking Pork Sausage.—Pork sausage requires slow cooking. If much fat collects, drain it off—to prevent greasiness. Pierce link sausage several times with a fork to prevent them from bursting while cooking. To form a brown, crusty covering on sausage sprinkle them with flour just before they are cooked.

The chairman said that the absence of foreign outlet for products coupled with increased production in the last few years has been responsible for decreasing the size of the allotments.

CONFUCIUS SAY—

MAN IN BARREL IS LUCKY-- TO STILL HAVE BARREL.

Young Men With Ambition Were Aided by Depression, Youth Expert Maintains

CHICAGO.—Take it from an expert—

The high school or college graduate is all wrong if he claims there's no opportunity for young men in the business and professional world. To the contrary, the depression has really produced new opportunities for youngsters with ideas.

This is the decision of Felix B. Streyckmans, a young man who is making young men his life's work. Streyckmans studied this phenomenon as editor of a magazine specializing in young men, and he's concluded that the depression merely wiped out a lot of old, impractical ideas.

It left a clear field ahead for new and youthful thinkers.

Now Streyckmans has assembled his opinions in a new book called "Today's Young Men," published by Reilly and Lee of Chicago. It lists the accomplishments of several score American youngsters, most of whom were up against the wall 10 years ago, and all of whom are successful today. It's Horatio Alger brought up to date.

Broadway's Sign King.

Douglas Leigh is one of Streyckmans' most unusual young men. At 30, Leigh is the sign king of Broadway. He owns more of Broadway's biggest and most striking electric signs than all the others combined, yet only seven years ago he arrived in New York from Birmingham with $8 in his pocket—and no prospect of a job.

Leigh figured the signs he saw along Broadway were bright and clever enough, but they didn't impress him with the cigarettes, automobiles, coffee or whatever they were supposed to be selling. So, on March 4, 1933 (the day of the bank holiday) he went into business. By applying individuality and novel treatment to this unique business, he's made more than a million dollars.

ORSON WELLES—At 24, he has behind him already a long record of achievement as actor and producer.

A young man who sees Leigh's signs every day is William McChesney Martin, who at 31 is president of the New York Stock exchange. He assumed this highly responsible financial post in the summer of 1938 as a result of reorganization designed to bring Wall street's operations out from behind a cloud of ill repute. Though he was born of a well-to-do St. Louis family, and although his father is president of the St. Louis Federal Reserve bank, it takes more than family connections to go uphill the way Bill Martin did it.

Recalls Colonial Spirit.

In "Today's Young Men," Streyckmans points out that the pioneering spirit of today is reminiscent of that which featured early America.

"The young man of today," he says, "being a pioneer in the ruins of the last few decades, is first cousin to the pioneer of Colonial days. The outstanding men then were young—and the outstanding young men whose careers I have studied are closer to them in spirit than they are to their own fathers or their fathers' fathers."

Thomas Wingate of Amarillo, Texas, is a splendid example of this spirit. Seven years ago, when Tom was 17, his father died and left him a $165,000 soft-drink works. The city's oldsters shook their heads, and they had every reason to. Imagine trying to sell soft drinks in a drouth-stricken area just when prohibition was being repealed!

But Tom, realizing he couldn't use conventional methods, won his employees' good will by raising their salaries and promising Christmas bonuses. They went to work with a will, and the Wingate bottling works got back on its feet. Last summer Tom refused an offer of more than a million dollars cash for his business. How's that for a 24-year-old?

Young Poultry King.

There's a somewhat similar case near Houston, Texas. The hero of this story is 22-year-old Dewey Stringer, blond, and slightly built,

WILLIAM M. MARTIN—Only 31, he is the highly successful president of the New York stock exchange.

THEOS BERNARD — 30-year-old American who was the first white man ever to become a Buddhist monk. He spent several years in Tibet, visiting and photographing places no white man had ever seen.

who inherited a large poultry farm when his father died four years ago. In that period he's become such an authority and so successful that the home economics bureau of the United States department of agriculture cites him as one of America's outstanding poultry raisers. He produces a half million of the country's "best" eggs every month.

Actually, the most successful youngster listed in "Today's Young Men" is 22-year-old William Brannan, who graduated from Beloit college in Wisconsin last year. In college he was a varsity wrestler, a member of the debate team and glee club, an accordionist and an excellent student. Last summer, after he finished college, he began selling insurance. With six months to go it now seems certain that he will top the $100,000 mark in his first year. Unusual? Perhaps not, except that Bill Brannan is blind.

Newsmen Who Were Successful.

"Today's Young Men" lists quite a few writers. Two of them are Robert Kintner and Joseph Alsop Jr., 30 and 31, respectively, whose "Capital Parade" column from Washington is a highly successful syndicated feature. Both started on the New York Herald-Tribune. They've made a success of their column by working hard, gathering unusual information and presenting it from a mature and well-reasoned viewpoint.

Bill Rogers, the 27-year-old son of Will Rogers, the late movie comedian, bought the Beverly Hills Citizen when he was 23 years old. In the past five years he's become one of the most influential journalists in the West, not because he is Will Rogers' son but because he's become a highly successful publisher, both financially and editorially.

There are many other young men in the editorial field. Paul Smith, 30, is managing editor of the San Francisco Chronicle. He's served on the farm security board and the farm tenancy commission, and is credited with settling a hopelessly deadlocked San Francisco warehousemen's strike.

Streyckmans insists that his young men have become successful largely because they didn't know the balmy days of 1920-30, and therefore had nothing to lament.

College Research Given Credit For Speeding Building Trades

WASHINGTON. — Prospects of a 15 per cent increase in residential construction in 1940 over 1939 add significance to the contribution made to the building industry by research laboratories of American colleges and universities during the past decade.

These research activities have made it possible to get more for each building dollar and effect economies of about $180,000,000 on the nation's annual home construction bill, according to a survey by the National Home Builders' bureau.

The survey attaches "more than ordinary significance" to the value of new discoveries by technicians in institutions of higher learning. Although only a comparatively small portion of the money expended on industrial research is available to campus chemists, physicists and technical experts, their contribution to economic recovery has been far greater than generally realized, the report stated.

Farmer Aided by Research.

The work done by agricultural colleges and university experimental groups in aiding the farmer is perhaps more widely recognized. Modern methods of crop rotation, more diversified use of farm products, intensified ways of cultivation have all benefited from the activities in campus laboratories.

However, college research has also developed such aids to better building as a new method of adhering structural glass to concrete to form a single glass stone unit, improved weather conditioning of the home for both winter and summer comfort, a wide variety of plastics, better paints and lacquers.

It has been estimated conservatively by building engineers that research in academic laboratories during the past 10 years into new and improved uses for building materials has cut six cents off every dollar spent for such products.

Negroes Use Odd Cures To Combat 'Miseries'

ATLANTA —Southern farm Negroes afflicted with a "misery" have some unique medicines Among them:

Neuralgia can be cured with a ball of camphor gum tied about the neck and resting on the chest.

Colds can be routed with a small bag of tea placed on the eye.

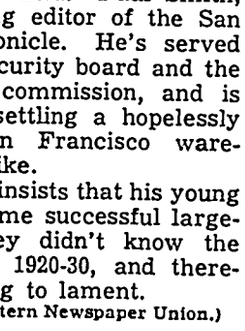
For hoarseness, try a piece of well-chewed horse radish.

Industrial Products Are 'Dressed Up' to Spur Greater Sales

NEW YORK.—Under the magic wand of an Indiana boy, who made the big city sit up and listen, a strange mixture of science, engineering and art is helping to fit the luxuries of modern living to the pocketbooks of Mr. and Mrs. America.

High in his modern office, in one of the busiest sections of New York city, Walter Dorwin Teague, who was born in Pendleton, Ind., is taking industrial products apart, analyzing them, and handing them back with new clothes, new color and in a majority of cases, at a cheaper price to the consumer.

He is the pioneer of industrial design, the "tailor" of manufactured products. So heartily has industry taken Teague's designs to its bosom that he is retained by several of the largest corporations of the country just to keep their products and business equipment well dressed.



Walter D. Teague

"Good design," Teague says, "is design for maximum functional efficiency."

Therein lies the success story of a score of products, some originally designed, some redesigned by Teague, who came to New York to study painting, found his talents better adapted to decorative advertising display and typography, where he became a leader. Then, bowing to the wishes of his clients, he turned to industrial design. Since that time he has designed everything from cameras and stoves to huge exhibit buildings at the world's fair, where he is one of the members of the board of design.

WASHINGTON.—That secret Dies committee meeting did not consider new investigational plans as announced by Chairman Dies. What actually took place was a fight to fire J. B. ("Doc") Matthews, the committee's so-called "Communism expert."

The effort came within one vote of succeeding. Matthews was saved only by the slim margin of 4 to 3.

The dismissal motion was made by Rep. John J. Dempsey, silver-haired New Mexican, who has long been opposed to Matthews' employment. Supporting Dempsey were his two liberal colleagues, Reps. Joseph Casey of Massachusetts and Jerry Voorhis of California. Voting with Dies, who hired Matthews and has been his chief backer, was the fourth Democrat, Joe Starnes of Alabama, and the two Republican members, Noah Mason of Illinois and J. Parnell Thomas of New Jersey.

Dempsey's move provoked a heated clash. In demanding Matthews' ouster, Dempsey charged the investigator with bringing the committee into disrepute by his "radical background" and his "passion for grinding personal axes."

As an instance of this he cited Matthews' report on alleged Red influence in consumer organizations. This report, issued last December from Dies' home in Orange, Texas, without the knowledge or consent of the full committee, vigorously assailed the Consumers Union.

"I hold no brief for this organization," Dempsey asserted, "but it happens that it is a competitor of Consumers Research, in which Matthews has a large financial interest. But he didn't mention Consumers Research in his report while he attacked Consumers Union and other consumer groups."

Dies militantly rushed to the defense.

"I know Matthews is a former radical," he shouted, "but that doesn't alter the fact that he has been very valuable to us in exposing the inner workings of the Communist movement."

"If that is so," broke in Casey, "then let's keep him in that role. I have no objection to keeping him on our payroll as long as he remains in the job we hired him for —an informer. But I strongly object to his acting as the principal investigator of the committee, asking questions of witnesses and issuing reports he has no authority to put out."

Undaunted by the rejection of his dismissal motion, Dempsey offered another to slash Matthews' salary, upped from $3,600 to $6,000 by Dies, to $4,800. But again Matthews was saved by one vote—4 to 3.

FRANCES AND HOTTENTOTS

He Done 'Em Wrong.

. . . John L. (CIO) Lewis gets some information about some ladies.

John L. Lewis got an unexpected kickback from his rip-snorting assertion that Madame Secretary Perkins knew as much about labor problems "as a Hottentot knows about the moral code."

Two weeks after the convention he received a letter from a foreign missionary reading as follows:

"Dear Mr. Lewis: I cannot let the insult you hurled at the Hottentots pass unchallenged. I have lived and worked among these people for many years and have found on the whole that they have a much higher respect for the moral code than people who live in so-called civilized nations.

"If what you say about Miss Perkins is true, then she must be a very excellent public servant. I commend her."

ROOSEVELT AND DIPLOMATS

The President has discarded all the formal trappings for receiving a new diplomat. He tried the informal manner and liked it.

This means three principal changes in procedure. He receives in his office instead of in the White House proper; he wears his business suit, instead of pin striped trousers and cutaway coat; and he omits the reading of the official messages.

These messages are still prepared and released to the press, but the new diplomat is saved the trouble of reading, and the President is saved the trouble of listening. Incidentally, the last message presented was the longest on record—that of Panama's new Ambassador George Boyd.

The President now uses the time to better advantage. With no one in the room except himself and the diplomat, unless an interpreter is required, he carries on an informal and friendly chat on matters that interest them both.

THE most extensive nation-wide talent search ever conducted for a motion picture role is under way; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has sent scouts out to assemble candidates for the boy role of "Jody" for the filming of "The Yearling." The boy selected will appear with Spencer Tracy in Sidney Franklin's production of the novel, a story of early days in Florida.

The role calls for a boy between the ages of ten and twelve, of slight build, from four and one-half to five feet tall. It's the chance of a lifetime for some lucky lad.

he got a job writing a sports column for a newspaper. That led to radio, and he became a sports announcer for a large network.

While covering the Cubs' spring training trip he was introduced to Warner Brothers' casting director, and his voice and appearance made such an impression that he was given a screen test, and then a contract. His newest assignment is "An Angel From Texas," in which his bride, Jane Wyman, and Eddie Albert appear with him.

Incidentally, Jane won't part with her wedding ring for an instant. But you won't see it in this picture; she had to tuck it under her belt so that it wouldn't show.

It's among the extras in Hollywood that you hear the most dramatic stories, but few of them equal the true tale of what happened to Dona Dix, who's now an extra on the Warner lot. (She's in the new Reagan picture, but you probably won't notice her.) A few years ago she left the New York stage and took a boat to Hollywood. When the ship stopped at Panama she bought some lottery tickets. She won $52,000.

She promptly abandoned her career, and devoted herself to enjoying her wealth. But one bad investment followed another, and the money disappeared. Today she's an extra—and glad of it!

Florence Gill, who created the popular "Clara Cluck" in the Walt Disney cartoons, publicly confessed on the "It Happened in Hollywood" program recently that it was all the result of bad luck—or so she thought at the time the bad luck came along. She was studying for an operatic career when a long illness caused her to retire from singing. When she recovered she worked on her barnyard imitation, Disney heard her, and promptly put "Clara Cluck" on the screen.

Joins Union Army.

By this time the young Irish immigrant was enjoying a large income, but at the outbreak of the Civil war he gave this up to accept a commission as a lieutenant in the sixty-ninth New York regiment, commanded by Colonel Corcoran. So rapidly did he master the details of military life that he was promoted to major and became adjutant on the staff of Gen. David Hunter. When Maj. Gen. Henry W. Halleck became commander-in-chief of the Union armies, Halpine was transferred to his staff and stationed in Washington. In addition to preparing all of Halleck's official correspondence, Halpine began writing again for the New York Herald.

Under the nom de plume of "Miles O'Reilly," he assumed the character of a private in the forty-seventh New York regiment and began writing a series of amusing articles which became instantly popular. It was in one of these articles that Halpine started the Lincoln-Grant "whisky myth" which has persisted to this day.

In its issue of November 26, 1863, the New York Herald carried a five-column article, signed by "Private Miles O'Reilly," which was given almost as much prominence in the paper as the news story of the victories near Chattanooga. It was captioned "Miles O'Reilly at the White House" and was a wholly fictitious account of O'Reilly's being made a guest of honor at a large function at the White House, attended by all the Washington notables, including President Lincoln, Secretary Stanton, General Halleck and Lord Lyons, the British ambassador.

A Party at the White House.

A part of Halpine's dispatch, describing the festivities at the White House, reads as follows:

" 'Colonel Bell, please touch the bell,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'and let Burgdorff, my messenger, send us up the decanters and things. I have some French wines sent me from Paris by Secretary of Legation Pennington, whose tongue is so completely occupied in the business of tasting vintages that he has never had time to teach it French, though a resident in Paris many years. If you prefer whisky, I have some that can be relied upon—a present from Mr. Leslie Combs. I call it "Grant's Particular" and Halleck is about issuing an order that all his generals shall use it.'

" 'With the news we have today from Chattanooga,' said General Halleck gayly, 'I think the country will indorse the order to which Mr. Lincoln has referred. For my own part, I'll take some of that whisky—just enough to drown a mosquito, Kelton—and, with the President's permission, our first toast will be the health of Ulysses Grant, the river-horse of the Mississippi.'

"Secretary Stanton seconded the toast in a neat and spirited address, Mr. Lincoln frequently applauding. The health was received with all the honors, every one present standing up while the liquor went down, and the company giving three cheers for General Grant, and then three more, and then three after that to top off with."

The story spread all over the country and eventually "Private Miles O'Reilly's" part in it and his authorship of it were forgotten. People began telling it as "another good Abe Lincoln yarn." Naturally, the friends of General Grant, who had been troubled by rumors of his intemperance, were glad to spread the story, since Lincoln's alleged remark provided a good excuse for his drinking, if it was true that he was addicted to liquor.

As the story gained currency, it occurred to some of Lincoln's friends to ask him if the story were true. Among them were the war department telegraphers, his "boys" whom he saw nearly every day when he called at the telegraph office to get the latest news from the front. One of these was Albert B. Chandler, later president of the Postal Telegraph company.

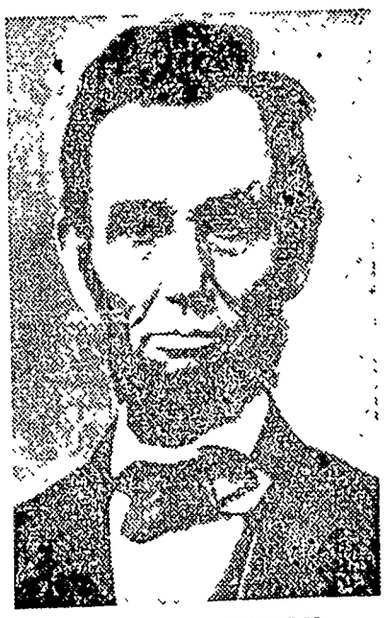
Lincoln Denies Authorship.

In 1895 Chandler attempted to dispel the myth by making this statement: "Major Eckert asked Mr. Lincoln if the story of his interview with the complainants against General Grant was true, viz. that he had inquired solicitously where the general got his liquor and, on being told that the information could not be given, the President replied that he would very much like to find out, so that he might get enough to send a barrel to each of his generals Mr. Lincoln said that he had heard the story before, and that it would have been very good if he had said it but that he didn't. He supposed it was 'charged to him' to give it currency.

"He then said the original of the story was in King George's time. Bitter complaints were made to the king against his General Wolfe (victor over Montcalm at the Battle of Quebec which ended the French and Indian war), in which it was charged that he was mad. The king replied angrily, 'I wish he would bite some of my other generals, then.'

"He then mentioned a bright saying which he had recently heard during the draft riots in New York, in which the Irish figured most conspicuously—'It is said that General Kilpatrick is going to New York to quell the riot; but his name has nothing to do with it.' "

Similar testimony is given by Chaplain James B. Merwin, who was commissioned by Lincoln to talk temperance to the soldiers.



ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Merwin stated that Lincoln denied authorship of the quip about Grant and said that the joke was a hundred years old when he first heard it attributed to him.

Athough Halpine's chief claim to fame seems to rest upon his authorship of this story which became a favorite "Lincoln myth," he had other distinctions which should make his name memorable. For, as the popularity of his "Private Miles O'Reilly at the White House" demonstrated, he had a genius for imaginative writing. He had proved that early in his career as a New York journalist. To win a bet he produced a long account of the resuscitation of a pirate named Hicks, who had been executed on Bedloe's island, and this hoax, which was believed by many people, caused a great deal of excitement in New York.

Upon his return to New York he served on the staff of Gen. John A. Dix and during that time wrote a series of articles exposing the corruption of the city government which attracted the attention of the Citizens' association. As a result he was offered the editorship of the Citizen, the organ of the reform movement which was inaugurated at that time. Soon afterwards he bought the paper and plunged into politics to fight "Boss" Tweed. He scored his first victory when a coalition of Democrats and Republicans elected him to county register by a large majority and this was followed by other political triumphs.

During all this time, Halpine had continued with his literary labors and his constant writing made him subject to insomnia for which he took opiates. The result was a tragic end to his career—through the mistake of a druggist he took an overdose of chloroform, when attacked by a severe pain in his head, and died on August 3, 1868.

Reference has been made previously to Halpine's part in enrolling the first regiment of Negro soldiers. This was a subject which caused a great deal of discussion early in the Civil war. Of course, the Confederates were horrified and threatened all sorts of reprisals against Union officers who enlisted or commanded Negroes.

Even in the North there was considerable opposition to the idea, since it was held that "only white men should be allowed to fight for the Union." Halpine took notice of this discussion in one of his most famous poems:

Sambo's Right to Be Kilt

Some tell us 'tis a burnin' shame
To make the naygers fight;
An' that the thrade of bein' kilt
Belongs but to the white:
But as for me, upon my sowl!
So liberal are we here,
I'll let Sambo be murthered instead of myself,
On every day of the year.
On every day of the year, boys,
And in every hour of the day;
The right to be kilt I'll divide wid him,
An' divil a word I'll say.

In battle's wild commotion
I shouldn't at all object
If Sambo's body should stop a ball
That was comin' for me direct;
And the prod of a Southern bagnet,
So ginerous are we here,
I'll resign, and let Sambo take it
On every day in the year.
On every day in the year, boys,
And wid none o' your nasty pride,
All my right in a southern bagnet prod
Wid Sambo I'll divide!

The men who object to Sambo
Should take his place and fight;
And it's betther to have a nayger's hue
Than a liver that's wake an' white.
Though Sambo's black as the ace of spades,
His finger a thrigger can pull,
And his eye runs sthraight on the barrel-sights
From undher its thatch of wool.
So hear me all, boys darlin',
Don't think I'm tippin' you chaff,
The right to be kilt we'll divide wid him,
And give him the largest half!

Among Halpine's published works after the war were "Lyrics by the Letter H," "Life and Adventures, Songs, Services, and Speeches of Private Miles O'Reilly, 47th. Regiment, New York Volunteers" and "Baked Meats of the Funeral: a Collection of Essays, Poems, Speeches, and Banquets by Private Miles O'Reilly." Among the poems in the latter volume is one which has often been reprinted. In some respects, its theme was curiously prophetic of the "Last Man" banquets held by Civil war veterans during recent years. It reads as follows:

The Thousand and Thirty-Seven
(April 20, 1864.)

Three years ago, today,
We raised our hands to Heaven,
And, on the rolls of muster,
Our names were thirty-seven;
There were just a thousand bayonets,
And the swords were thirty-seven,
As we took the oath of service
With our right hands raised to Heaven.

Oh, 'twas a gallant day,
In memory still adored,
That day of our sun-bright nuptials
With the musket and the sword!
Shrill rang the fifes, the bugles blared,
And beneath a cloudless heaven
Far flashed a thousand bayonets,
And the swords were thirty-seven.

Of the thousand stalwart bayonets
Two hundred march today;
Hundreds lie in Virginia swamps,
And hundreds in Maryland clay;
While other hundreds—less happy—drag
Their mangled limbs around,
And envy the deep, calm, blessed sleep
Of the battlefield's holy ground.

For the swords—one night a week ago
The remnant, just eleven—
Gathered around a banqueting board
With seats for thirty-seven.
There were two came in on crutches,
And two had each but a hand,
To pour the wine and raise the cup
As we toasted "Our Flag and Land!"

And the room seemed filled with whispers
As we looked at the vacant seats,
And with choking throats we pushed aside
The rich but untasted meats;
Then in silence we brimmed our glasses
As we stood up—just eleven—
And bowed as we drank to the Loved and the Dead
Who had made us Thirty-seven!

After Halpine's death which Robert B. Roosevelt, uncle of the President, called "a national calamity," Mr. Roosevelt edited a volume of his poems and issued them as "The Poetical Works of Charles G. Halpine."

THE SEPULCHER: TRIUMPH OVER DEATH

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 27 57—28:6.
GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept.—I Corinthians 15:20.

The inspiration and spiritual renewing of Easter day comes to us again. How thankful every Christian should be for this day of remembrance of our Lord's triumph over death. How much we should praise God that the day for us who are His disciples is not one of outward display but of inward revival. May this Easter bring a real quickening to the Church.

In our series of lessons in Matthew we have followed our Lord in His life and ministry on through Gethsemane to Calvary. Today we find loving hands giving themselves in what they thought to be the final act of devotion to their Lord, and we also see the hands of wicked men active in what they thought was a final act of hatred. Then suddenly the Lord Himself breaks through in resurrection power.

I. Love Is Kind (27:57-61).

The women, whose devotion to their Lord never wavered, were joined in the final act of taking the body of Jesus from the cross and burying it by two secret disciples of the Lord who now came out into the open, Joseph of Arimathea, a member of the Sanhedrin (Luke 23:50, 51), and Nicodemus (John 19 39, 40). It was a courageous act on their part and undoubtedly the expression of their great love for Jesus.

The two Marys seemed to have stayed to watch the grave even after Joseph had gone to his home. The death of Jesus may have crushed their hopes, for they apparently did not recall His promise of resurrection, but they still loved Him. After all, is not that the ultimate and essential mark of a disciple, love for our Lord? Faith may waver, hope deferred may make the heart sick with discouragement, but nevertheless we will follow the example of these disciples and never let our love for Him grow cold. In due season such faithfulness finds a glorious reward.

II. Hatred Is Relentless (27:62-66).

The wicked men who had brought about the crucifixion of Jesus were not content to let their hatred of Him die at the grave. They lusted after His life and they had taken that, but even as He lay silent in the grave, the priests and the Pharisees came to Pilate and called Him "that deceiver" (v. 63) and demanded a special guard They feared that His disciples would perpetrate a fraud, and after stealing the body declare that He was risen. Wicked and deceitful hearts can imagine all sorts of treachery on the part of others.

The hatred of unbelievers toward Christ and toward His followers knows no stopping place. In civilized lands and among cultured people it operates under a cloak of respectability, but it is none the less bitter and relentless in its pursuit of Him and of His Church.

Observe that while the chief priests and Pharisees acted in hatred and unbelief, they unwittingly did the cause of Christ a great service by demanding the guard over the tomb. They made it forever impossible for any charge of fraud to be successfully made against the truth of the resurrection.

III. Christ Is Triumphant (28:1-6).

Victory and praise should be the keynote of Christianity. Why should we be doleful and sad? Our Lord has come back victorious from the grave! We may be glad and sing even in the midst of earth's sorrows and distresses. Let praise be the employ of our lips constantly as we worship Him and work for Him.

The picture that greeted the surprised eyes of the two women as they came to the grave as it began to dawn on the first day of the week was one resplendent with the glory and majesty of God. The earth quaked as the lightning and white angel of the Lord broke through the unbreakable seal of Rome and rolled back the stone which was to have permanently closed the door to the tomb. This was done, not to release Christ—for He had already gone, no grave could hold Him—but that men might see the empty grave and know that He was risen.

To the foes of Christ represented by the keepers, the coming of the angel and the revelation of the power of God brought absolute discomfiture. That is still true. Men will argue with theology, church methods, even Christian profession, until they see the power of God revealed, and then they can only be "as dead men."

To the friends of Christ the angel brought comfort and assurance. Their fears were assuaged by his word of comfort, and then their faith was revived by the assurance that Christ was risen. The resurrection declares that He is the Son of God with power, the Saviour of the world.

Easter Bunny Stays As White as Snow

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

STUFFED toys of oil cloth or water-proof bath curtain material are something mothers have been dreaming about. Just wipe them off with a damp cloth to keep them fresh and clean.

The Easter bunny shown here is 11 inches long. He is white, hand-stitched in heavy pink thread and has pink bead or button eyes. Make your own pattern for him by following the diagram. Rule paper into 1-inch squares; number them; then draw the pattern outlines. Cut two body pieces; four ear pieces and a 2-inch strip to be used between the two sides of the body. Interline the ears to make them stand up. Join all raw edges, as shown, leaving an opening in the body for stuffing tightly with cotton or bits of soft cloth; then finish sewing.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book No. 2 contains numerous gift and bazaar items, including a doll's wardrobe; men's ties; purses; baby's bassinet; 32 pages in all.

Junk-Yard Music

The world's most astonishing organ has just been completed in Atlantic City by an amateur musician. It is made of discarded bottles, old vacuum-cleaner motors, pieces of inner tubing, and all sorts of rubbish collected from junk heaps. Notes are sounded by forcing air from cleaner motors across small holes in the caps of bottles tuned by partly filling them with water.

The junk-organ looks nothing like an orthodox instrument, but it produces music well enough. Attached to it are bells, saucepan lids and whistles to give additional effects.

Why Let Yourself Get Constipated?

Why endure those dull headachy days due to constipation, plus the inevitable trips to the medicine chest, if you can avoid both by getting at the cause of the trouble?

If your constipation, like that of millions, is due to lack of "bulk" in the diet, the "better way" is to eat Kellogg's All-Bran.

This crunchy toasted breakfast cereal is the ounce of prevention that's worth a pound of emergency relief. It helps you not only to get regular but to keep regular, day after day and month after month, by the pleasantest means you ever knew.

Eat Kellogg's All-Bran regularly, drink plenty of water, and see if you don't forget all about constipation. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

For production of early broilers ... birds that will be sold at 10 to ... weeks of age—there's some advantage in buying crossbred chicks providing both parent stocks are good quality heavy breeds, says H L Wilcke, head of poultry husbandry at Iowa State College.

RURAL PUPILS VISIT TIMES OFFICE TO WATCH PRINTING

Miss Nora Wellemeyer, teacher in the Swanson School two miles east of Klemme, accompanied by her five pupils, visited the Times Office where they watched the process of printing a newspaper

The group were shown the Linotype machine in operation and watched this complicated machine produce type to be used in the paper The type thus set was then placed in the newspaper form, locked up, placed on the press and a few papers were then printed Next the papers were run through the folding machine and were then ready for mailing.

Each of the visitors was given a linotype slug with their name and address on the same The slugs are standard newspaper size They are 13 ems long, 10 points thick and the type face is 8 point Excelsior Nearly all newspapers use the 8 point type face for news.

The pupils were also given a demonstration on printed work produced on the platen, or job press This press is used for a variety of commercial printing, such as letterheads, envelops, cards business forms, etc.

Other items and equipment found in the shop were also explained to the pupils.

The pupils in the Swanson school are La Vonne Hanson, Billy Harson, Darwin Wille, Madelyn Lundy, and Dickie Gilpin.

WORLD'S GREATEST DANCE TEAM IN "BROADWAY MELODY OF 1940"

Teaming for the first time, Fred Astaire and Eleanor Powell, world's greatest male and feminine tap dancers, "Broadway Melody of 1940", opens at the Avery Theatre next Sunday, Mar. 24, for an engagement of three days. Ever since each star rose to overnight screen fame, it has been the hope of Hollywood, to combine their talents in one production, but commitments prevented until Metro-Goldwyn Mayer last spring was able to sign Astaire for this picture. To give the two stars the best possible musical settings, M-G-M signed Cole Porter, who has written music for both Astaire and Miss Powell starring vehicles, to do the tunes for this picture. The composer of "Night and Day", has produced five new songs for "Broadway Melody of 1940", and use is made for the first time on the screen of his sensational "Begin The Beguine."

Included in this picture are nine dance numbers by Fred Astaire and Miss Powell.

DRAMATICS

The following is a short synopsis of "Big-Hearted Herbert", the Senior class play:

Herbert Kalness is a self-made business man who insists that his family must be brought up in the plain traditions. When his daughter becomes engaged to a Harvard man and his wife has not only ice cream, but Harvard men to dinner Herbert nearly goes out of his mind with rage Herbert's home becomes safe for Harvard men only after his family has embarrassed him by embracing his plain tradition literally The sight of his wife in an old wrapper and a supper consisting of Irist stew and apple pie, destroys this curmudgeon's resistance

LEFT-OVERS CHALLENGE HOUSEWIFELY IMAGINATION

Just why left-overs should be considered the problem children of the kitchen, is a mystery to me! They're a challenge to one's housewifely imagination, of course, but cleverly combined and judiciously seasoned, they may become a distinguished dish, around which to build an attractive and satisfying meal.

When they're served as left-overs there's nothing particularly inspiring about the little dabs of vegetables that accumulate in the refrigerator. But when they're seasoned with care, combined in a smooth, creamy cheese sauce, and served in an unusual bread ring, they become a totally new, delicious and nourishing main dish for a meal. Left-over vegetables combine, too, to create "vegetables a la king," or a hearty lunch or supper salad.

Odds and ends of vegetables and meat unite to make a meat loaf of distinction, and scraps of Sunday's roast can be used to advantage in tasty appetizers or "buffet supper dishes."

Even the bits of yesterday's cake and pie contribute to the success of today's dinner. Not-so-fresh cake, served with a hot sauce, becomes delicate pudding; from dry cake pieces, dried or candied fruit, and left-over custard, a cabinet pudding is evolved; and that quarter of berry pie left over from last night's dinner is the basis of a truly delicious "Cinderella Dessert."

Left-overs are time and budget savers—much too important to be merely heated and served as "scraps." Use them wisely and well and add variety to meals, to save time, and to cut food costs.

Surprise Frankfurters.
(Serves 5-6)

2¼ cups mashed potato
1 egg (beaten)
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon parsley (minced)
6 to 7 cold, cooked frankfurters
½ cup bread crumbs

Combine the mashed potatoes with the beaten egg and the seasoning. Cover each frankfurter with the potato mixture, forming a "blanket" about ¼-inch thick. Roll in crumbs. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees) for 25 minutes, or fry in deep fat (390 degrees) until golden brown.

Biscuit Meat Loaf.
(Serves 4-5)

1 cup carrots (chopped)
½ cup celery (chopped)
¼ cup green pepper (chopped)
2 tablespoons onion (chopped)
2 cups left-over beef roast (ground)
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 recipe biscuit dough

Combine the vegetables, put through meat grinder and cook in ¾ cup water until the vegetables are tender. Drain. Combine with meat, add seasonings, and form into a roll. Cover with biscuit dough and place in a shallow, greased pan. Bake in a hot oven (400 degrees) for 20-25 minutes. Serve hot, with left-over gravy.

Vegetable and Egg Croquettes.

1 cup mashed potatoes (left over)
1 cup peas
1 tablespoon onion (finely cut)
3 eggs (hard cooked and finely cut)
1 teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
¼ cup butter (melted)

Combine the potatoes, peas, onion, eggs, salt and pepper and shape into croquettes. Arrange in shallow baking dish and brush with melted butter. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees) for 15 minutes.

Buffet Supper Rolls.

Put left-over meat or fowl through the meat grinder, twice. Moisten with a little gravy, to spreading consistency. Make a batch of biscuit dough, and roll out to ¼-inch thickness. Spread the meat on this and roll up like a jelly roll, to about 1 inch in diameter. Cut in 3-inch lengths. Place the rolls in a greased baking pan and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees) for 15-18 minutes.

Sauce for Croquettes.

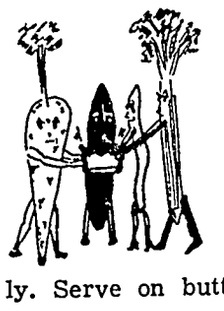
½ teaspoon brown sugar
2 slices onion (finely cut)
¼ cup butter
¼ cup flour
1 cup milk
1 cup bouillon stock
1 tablespoon raisins

Melt brown sugar in a skillet. Add onion and butter and cook until onion is slightly browned. Add flour and blend thoroughly. Add milk and bouillon stock and cook, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens. Add raisins and serve with the croquettes.

Vegetables a la King.
(Serves 6)

6 slices bacon
½ cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 cup mushrooms (canned or fresh)
3 cups milk
¼ cup green pepper (chopped)
¼ cup pimiento (chopped)
1 cup celery (chopped)
2 cups whole kernel corn

Cut bacon in small pieces, and cook until crisp. Stir in the flour, salt, and pepper, and blend well. Add mushrooms. Gradually add the milk, stirring constantly. Fold in remaining vegetables, and cook for 15 minutes over low heat, stirring frequently. Serve on buttered toast.



Cinderella Dessert.

With a fork, break up left-over pie or cake. Place in a buttered baking dish. Top with fruit (fresh, canned, or stewed), and add sugar if desired. Bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for 25-30 minutes. Serve with custard sauce.

Left-Over Dinner Ring.

8 cups soft bread crumbs
½ cup fat (melted)
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons onion (minced)
1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
4 eggs (slightly beaten)
¼ cup milk
1 cup peanuts (chopped)

Combine ingredients in order listed. Pack into a well-greased ring mold and bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) for about 30 minutes. Turn out onto large platter. Combine left-over vegetables in a cheese sauce and serve on the ring mold.

("A state income tax department is reported considering a suggestion that it cultivate the good will of taxpayers by sending them Christmas cards every year."—News item.)

Mr. Twitchell looked at the pretty card. "Seasonal Greetings from the State Income Tax Bureau," was the inscription on it below a picture of a tally-ho. He put on his glasses and read it again. Then he called Mrs. Twitchell, excitedly.

"What's this?" he demanded, apprehensively.

"It's a greeting from the income tax department," said Mrs. Twitchell.

"There's something behind it," declared Mr. Twitchell with conviction and emphasis.

"There can't be anything behind a greeting card," argued Mrs. Twitchell.

"I'm calling my tax accountant just the same," snapped Mr. Twitchell.

II.

"Is this you, Hemphill?" asked Elmer as he rang his tax accountant. "Good! This is Twitchell. I think I had better see you at once."

"What's happened?"

"It's a communication from the Income Tax Bureau."

"Well, what does it say?"

"It just says, 'Seasonal Greetings from the State Income Tax Bureau,'" explained Mr. Twitchell.

"Hm-mm-mm," mused Hemphill. "Maybe you'd better come in tomorrow and we'll look over things."

Mr. Twitchell made the appointment and hung up. He was now quite disturbed. He didn't like that picture of a tally-ho. It seemed too much like the police wagon.

"Always something from those tax departments," he blurted, pacing the floor. "If it isn't one thing it's another."

"But, Elmer, why do you get so excited You made out an honest return, didn't you?" put in Mrs. Twitchell

"Of course. But what of it? You have to keep explaining things, just the same!"

"But this is just a greeting card . . ."

"I guess I'll call up my lawyer," said Elmer, grabbing the phone.

III.

"Dodson?" asked Elmer, getting his attorney, "this is Twitchell. Did you get any seasonal greetings from the State Tax Bureau?"

"Calm yourself," said Dodson. "What's the trouble?"

"I am in receipt of a card from the State Income Tax Bureau, sending seasonal greetings. I don't like the looks of it."

"Just seasonal greetings? It doesn't ask any questions?"

"None. What does it mean?"

"I wouldn't want to say without a conference with my partners," said Dodson. "I haven't had any case just like that."

"How soon can you see them?" asked Elmer, anxiously.

"Tomorrow or next day. This is quite new. I once had a case where a Federal tax agent sent a birthday card to a taxpayer and we found out it called for no explanation from us, but a seasonal greeting, well, it's quite new. Suppose you drop in day after tomorrow. I'll have an opinion."

IV.

It was now late at night. Mr. Twitchell suddenly got up out of bed, took off his pajamas and dressed, even to his coat and hat.

"Why, Elmer, where are you going?" asked Mrs. Twitchell.

"I can't sleep. I think I'd better do it," he said.

"Do what?"

"Address a card to the tax bureau, wishing it well. It's just courtesy."

* * *

Mr. Twitchell addressed a card, mailed it and went back to bed. But he didn't sleep well.

He couldn't expect to until after those conferences with his accountants and attorney.

REVISED SPELLING

Hitler uses the personal pronoun "I" once in every 53 words, leading all speakers in the world in that respect. Mussolini is second with an "I" for ever 83 words. This answers for all time the question, "Popper, how many I's in 'dictator'?"

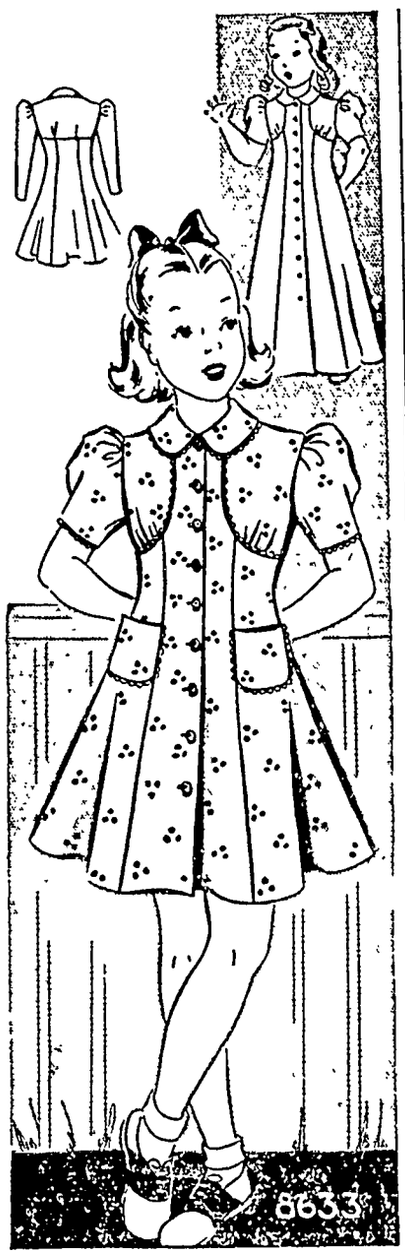
Pattern Department — Sewing Circle



MAKE your school-girl daughter an every-day frock and housecoat both, with this one simple pattern—8633. Buttoned down the front, made with a princess skirt and gathered bodice sections that suggest a bolero line, it's extremely becoming to immature figures. Easy to make, to put on and to iron, this pattern is just as useful and practical, in both its guises, as it is charming. For the wintry weather remaining, make it up in challis or flannel. For Spring it will be adorable in chintz, gingham or percale. It's really a style she'll enjoy the year-round.

Pattern No. 8633 is designed for sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8 requires 2⅝ yards of 39-inch material in frock length, with short sleeves; 3⅝ yards in housecoat length with long sleeves; 3⅝ yards with short sleeves without nap; 1½ yards trimming.

Black to White 3-Lane Sidewalk Bouncing Checks

The whitest of all white pigments is titanium dioxide, which is made from ilmenite, a black sand. This transformation, taking five days, requires several complicated chemical processes, after which the substance is calcined at a high temperature and ground into a fine powder.

By marking off its busy sidewalks into three traffic lanes, the inner for window shoppers and loafers, the middle for slow walkers and the outer for those in a hurry, Louisburg, N. C., (pop. 2,182), has eliminated its pedestrian traffic snarls.

The large hotels of New York city, in cashing millions of dollars' worth of checks annually for guests and patrons, average a loss of $1 out of every $2,600.—Collier's.

GRAPES SHOULD NOT BE PRUNED WHEN FROZEN

Although March is a good month to prune grape vines, pruning should not be done when the vines are frozen as the canes are then very brittle and easily broken, horticulturists at Iowa State College say.

In pruning, canes that grow well back on the main body of the vine should be saved. If not enough new wood is located to insure a crop, fruiting wood further back on the cane should be left the first season.

The best type of cane to choose for fruiting is one about the thickness of a lead pencil. The nodes on such a cane are short and the buds round and plump.

Four to six canes having a total of 35 to 50 buds will be enough to produce a good crop of fruit Leaving a few spurs that are attached to the main body of the vine, 30-36 inches above the ground, is considered a good practice by the horticulturists. These spurs will send out new strong canes that will produce the crop next year.

"She's My Daisy" is a farce-comedy in three acts by Vivian Mayo It is the story of Daisy Darling, a charming, though rattle-brained young woman who is the beneficiary of her uncle's strange will. The will states that she must not marry until she is twenty-five but at twenty-three, she has already been secretly married to Donald Darling for some time.

When her Aunt Lucy, the executrix of the will, comes to visit her, Daisy has an awful time concealing her husband's identity Complications reach a climatic stage when Aunt Lucy's newly acquired husband is found to be Donald's estranged uncle.

Of course, things take a turn for the better and all ends happily after a hectic time.

Admission will be 15c and 25c. Klemme's share of the proceeds will go toward furnishing the teacher's rest room in the new building.

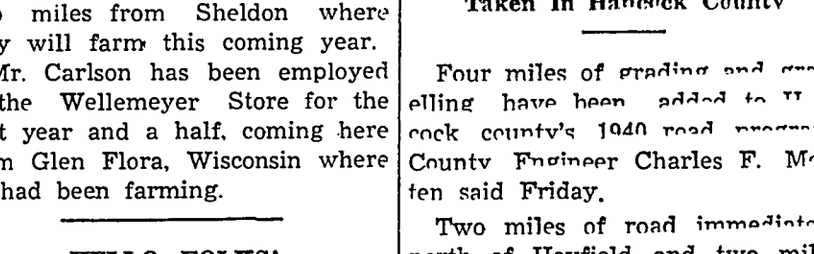
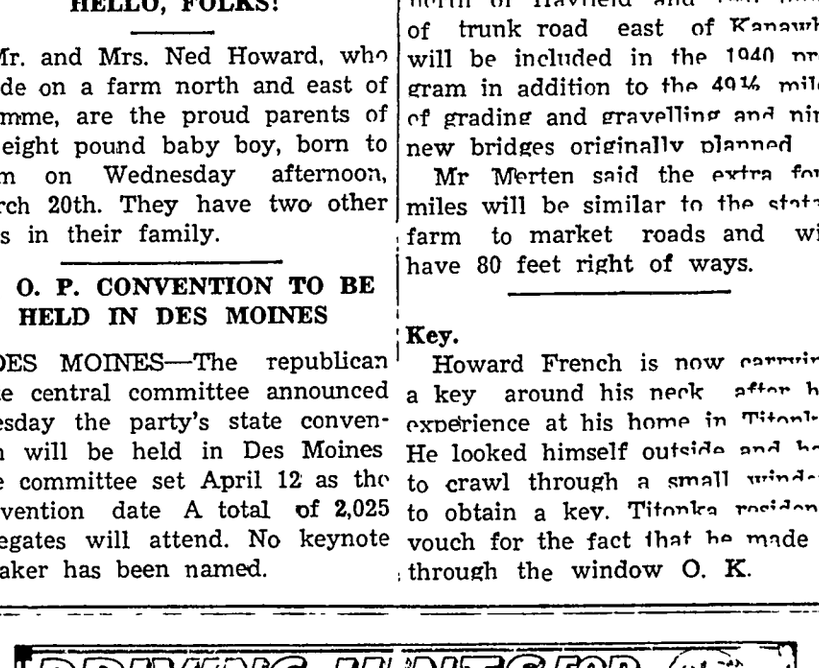
DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS JR. AND JOAN BENNETT CO-STARRED

Teamed together for the first time, Douglas Fairbanks Jr. and Joan Bennett are said to make one of the most striking romantic couples ever seen in a motion picture. They will be seen as co-stars of "Green Hell", initial famous production film for Universal release, which comes to the Avery Theatre on Sunday, March 31 for three days.

In the story, Joan is inadvertently marooned in the jungle camp of six men, headed by Fairbanks, who resents her presence because of its demoraliing effect upon his men. Joan is equally spiteful toward him. So they fall in love.

However, the plot requires an attack by savages, the death of two members of the camp and strained relations among all the others to bring about this transition. Supporting the two stars in this jungle drama, directed by James Whale, are John Howard, Alan Hale, George Bancroft, Geo. Sanders, Vincent Price, and others.





LOOK BEFORE YOU BACK

Watch Out! It always pays to look and look carefully before you back up even a few inches. Make sure there is no one behind you. When you first step into your car, look around, and make sure that you're not heading for another accident. The pedestrian should only cross streets at corners, but the driver should play safe by always looking behind before backing.

'Tommy the Cork' Marries Secretary Who (Like All Girls) Once Feared Him

By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

(Copyright, United Features Syndicate, Inc. Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON.—This is the story of a lovely symbol of the modern Girl Friday—Peggy Dowd, who a few days ago married her brain-truster boss, Tommy Corcoran, and thereby brought to many persons in and out of Washington a breathing spell for as long as she can keep him away on their honeymoon.

It's a romance as colorful as the eventful career of the curly-haired bridegroom.

In Washington, Peggy Dowd is always associated with the brain-trust. But long before there was a brain-trust or the world had ever heard of Tommy Corcoran, Peggy Dowd was holding down an important job. She was the personal secretary of one of the big men of the Hoover administration, Gardner Cowles, owner of the Des Moines Register and Tribune and director of the RFC

She Liked Midshipmen, Until—

It was a very pleasant job and Peggy thought her boss was a grand man. But her only interest in government was prom-hopping with dashing Annapolis midshipmen.

About this time there came to the RFC a young lawyer as Irish as herself. Peggy would see him now and then rushing along the corridors, but she never talked to him, for it was rumored in RFC feminine circles that he thoroughly disliked women, thought they had been put on earth only to get in the way of men's work.

Girls frankly were afraid to work for Tom Corcoran. He had come down to Washington from a big Wall Street law firm, and just could not get used to the deliberate civil service ways of government. He considered dictating to a shorthand book a waste of time, insisted that his secretary "take it down" on the typewriter as he talked—and he talked a blue streak.

Tommy Was a Tough One.

He also had a lot of crazy ideas about short-cuts through the telephone. He didn't care how big his phone bills were so long as they saved time. And around him he had a crowd of young fellows out of Harvard law school who were just as wild as he was and who, like him, telephoned all day and dictated all night.

Secretaries came to his office and departed like the days. None ever stayed longer than a week. There was a ladies' room legend, which persisted though Corcoran denied it, that he had once jerked a phone right out of its socket and tossed it at a secretary who insisted on going home at three o'clock in the morning. His constant cry to the head stenographer was for a male secretary.

The morning after Director Cowles, Peggy's boss, resigned and left for Iowa, the head stenographer, faced with her daily headache of finding a secretary for Corcoran (she called it the "suicide assignment"), summoned Peggy Dowd and said gently, "Report, please, to Mr Corcoran."

"Oh, no," said Peggy, "not me. There are other jobs in this world."

"For my sake, please try it for a few days," pleaded the head stenographer. "After all, he's Irish and you're Irish and you can handle him if anyone can. Just don't argue with him. Let him do things the way he wants to, even if they do seem crazy. Who knows, perhaps there is a method in his madness."

BRIDE AND GROOM—Thomas G. Corcoran, No. 1 "braintruster," poses with his bride and former secretary, Peggy Dowd, following their surprise marriage at Leesburg, Va. Peggy feared him (and what secretary didn't!) until each discovered the other was also Irish.

So Peggy went up to the lion's den. In a short while Corcoran's buzzer rang and Peggy went in "Get this telegram off right away," he ordered, without looking up or giving her time to sit down. Then for two minutes he reeled off a long wire so fast that Peggy didn't even get the start of it. For a few moments she stood there helpless; then, with a jerk of her head, she started for the door to tell the head stenographer it was "no go."

The Day Is Saved.

As Peggy turned, there burst into the room one of the Harvard law school boys, J. Raburn ("Food") Monroe, now a successful New Orleans lawyer and a power in the new anti-Long group, who flashed a telegram before Corcoran.

"That changes everything," Corcoran shouted to Peggy. "Kill that wire I just gave you."

So Peggy just walked back to her desk, pretending she had the wire but was not going to send it. The fortuitous interruption had saved her. And today Peggy has one extra name among her patron saints. The name is St. "Food."

The first crisis thus survived so fortunately, Peggy decided to test her luck further. At seven o'clock that night, Corcoran nonchalantly instructed, "Go out and get something to eat and meet me at the Capitol in the legislative counsel's office at 7:30. We've got a little job to do tonight, won't take more than an hour or so."

It took most of the allotted half hour just to get to the Capitol, but Peggy was there on time. And there she met two other turbines of the brain-trust, Ben Cohen and Jim Landis, later to become SEC chairman and dean of Harvard law school.

Big 'Little Job.'

The "little job" was something about a "securities bill" which had to be ready for a congressional committee the next morning. It was 4 a. m. when she pulled the last sheet out of the typewriter and the three men, after a critical reading, pronounced it "okay."

"Yes," added Corcoran with a cheery smile, "that's a swell job, Miss. What did you say your name was?"

"Margaret Dowd."

"Well, Margaret Dowd, tomorrow morning you tell the head stenographer that I said you'll do."

Thus Peggy Dowd got her start as the Girl Friday of the brain-trust, and began seven years of thrilling work carried on at about the same hectic tempo as her first day. Side by side with Corcoran, Cohen, Landis, Douglas, Jackson, Foley, Rowe, Dempsey, Rogge and others of the "family," she went through the epochal legislative battles of the New Deal—the securities act, the federal housing bill, the fierce TVA clashes, the tremendous holding company fight, the wage-hour bill, the historic Supreme court struggle, the Jackson-Ickes offensive against monopoly.

No More Parties for Peggy.

She was in the thick of them all, always in the background but always on hand, the confidential secretary of these confidential men-at-arms of the President. It meant no parties, no planning for a week or even a day ahead. Every waking hour was devoted to the job. And Peggy thrived under it all.

Whether it was because she and Tom Corcoran were falling in love, Peggy became more and more beautiful. In the last few years she has been conceded to be one of the most beautiful women in Washington.

Exquisitely attired, a honey-colored blonde, with big gray-green eyes ("Vivien Leigh eyes" Corcoran calls them), and a delicate complexion that her favorite pink camellias light up beautifully, she was the prettiest picture in working Washington. At the occasional play they went to, all eyes turned toward Peggy Dowd. But if the onlookers got an eyeful, they never got an earful.

Silent As a Sphynx.

For one of the most amazing things about this very amazing young lady is that, flattered, courted and cajoled by everyone seeking the inside lowdown, no one has ever been known to get anything out of her—except when Tom Corcoran for his own devious purposes wanted something to "get out."

But there was one secret that Peggy did "spill." She whispered it to her mother at the wedding party, just before she and Tom slipped out of town on their skiing honeymoon. It was this: That the last man who kissed her before Tom Corcoran gave her his bridal kiss at the altar of the little church in Leesburg, Va., was the President of the United States.

Note—Peggy will continue to be Corcoran's secretary. Also, the famous Corcoran-Cohen penthouse menage will be continued, occupied by Cohen alone.

Gamelin, Allied War Chieftain, Wears Down Foes by Stalling

PARIS. — Critics of General Gamelin, commander - in-chief of the British - French forces, have wondered why his men have been held in check behind lines instead of attacking the enemy across Germany's famed Westwall.

The answer, say Frenchmen in the "know," is that General Gamelin is playing a waiting game intentionally, having learned from experience that action is too often confused with mere agitation. Whereas Fuehrer Hitler is said to have delayed an attack because his army was not ready after the blitzkrieg in Poland, General Gamelin is merely following the battle tactics he has developed in a lifetime of military experience.

Possessing peculiar qualifications for a military commander, Gamelin spent his youth in water-color sketching. To this day he is a student of philosophy, which, paradoxically, may hold the key to his success.

Criticized in Syrian Campaign.

Best illustration of Gamelin's tactics is found in his conduct of the Syrian uprising in 1925, when he was sent to suppress the Djebel Druses and relieve the besieged French outpost of Soueida. While the French press cried out bitterly, he spent weeks in apparent idleness while more spontaneous generals would have attacked immediately.

General Gamelin

Gamelin has run the war so well that he may become the only French general to retain his command throughout a conflict.

Parisians say he reminds them of the famous old General Joffre, World war commander under whom he studied.. But they also recall that Gamelin was chiefly responsible for one of the major World war victories generally credited to Joffre.

This happened when Gamelin, as a major in charge of Joffre's military establishment during the battle of the Marne, detected a weakness of the German position, recommended an immediate attack and helped draw up the famous September 4 order. It launched a battle which altered history.

Age-Old Puppetry Art Demands 'Personalities'

CHICAGO.—A puppet is only a puppet to some people. But to Walton and O'Rourke, pupeteers extraordinary appearing in the Palmer House here, any puppet worth his weight in wood must live up to the personality his designers have intended for him.

This 3,000-year-old art has been perfected to new heights by Walton and O'Rourke

DON WILSON, the plump and genial radio announcer, has turned actor with a vengeance. He led up to it gently by using his voice, but not his poundage (he tips the scales at 300) in "Buck Benny Rides Again."

You'll see him in person in "The Round-Up," in the role of "Slim," made famous by the late Macklyn Arbuckle. And who knows, he may like acting so well that he'll never want to return to announcing.

The chief difficulty so far has been finding a horse that would hold him, but he's promised to take care of that by producing one that he rides frequently—seems that, though hefty, he's an expert horseman.

Right off the griddle is the report that Professor Quiz is all set to sign a deal with one of the major movie companies for a series of shorts centering around the Professor's radio specialty of questions and answers. Perhaps he's been inspired to do it by the success of those "Information Please" shorts.

Gone are the days when a hero had to be perfect every minute that he was on the screen. In Paramount's "Road to Singapore" Bing Crosby is a shiftless sort of guy, aided and abetted in a career of idleness by Dorothy Lamour and Bob Hope Three other matinee idols have forgotten the maxims of their copybooks, so far as new pictures are concerned. Robert Montgomery gets himself hanged in "The Earl of Chicago"; George Brent portrays a fugitive from justice in "Till We Meet Again"; and Tyrone Power, believe it or not, is a gangster in his latest.

Judy Garland is on her way up, and rapidly. This year it was quite a distinction for anyone who wasn't in the cast of "Gone With the Wind" to win one of the annual awards of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences. Little Judy got a special one for work as "an outstanding juvenile."

—:—

Janice Logan looked so attractive in the brief costume that she wore when working in "Dr. Cyclops," the forthcoming Paramount technicolor picture, that the Art Students league voted her "The Best Undressed Woman of the Year." (That's the trick picture in which the members of the cast are reduced to one-fifth their natural size.) So now Miss Logan must be all-round champion so far as clothes are concerned. When she was a senior at swanky Sarah Lawrence college she was voted the School's Best Dressed Student.

JANICE LOGAN

According to Joan Bennett, one of the greatest predicaments well-dressed women fear is putting on a new outfit and then finding someone else wearing one just like it. That's what happened to her not long ago when she appeared to take part in a Bing Crosby broadcast. She was wearing a nifty new hat. She glanced around, and saw one exactly like it on the head of Sabu, the young Indian movie actor—he'd just put on his native turban.

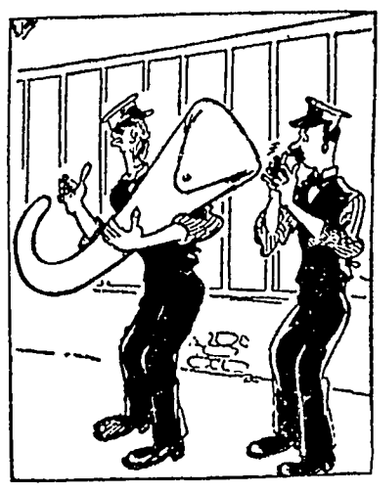
The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

By DREW PEARSON & ROBERT ALLEN

WASHINGTON. — One of the strangest paradoxes of the European war is the attitude taken by the state department toward several hundred American medical students, who have sought permission to go abroad to complete their studies at British universities.

They have been refused passports on the ground that their lives would be in danger on English soil. But while taking this restrictive stand toward seekers after learning, the department is allowing a number of these very same students to go to France to drive ambulances at the front!



"Trombone? Don't be silly it's the baby elephant's gas-mask.

Official explanation for the contradiction is that driving a war ambulance is "humanitarian" work.

So far about 50 students have been given passports for ambulance service.

NEVER AGAIN.

The biggest laugh during Sen. Burt Wheeler's speech at the hilarious National Press club banquet, where nine presidential possibilities told why they should NOT be elected, was prompted by an unexpected sharp remark.

"I haven't a chance," the Montanan was saying, "because John L. Lewis is for me. Another reason is that I was the running-mate of 'Old Bob' LaFollette in 1924. Still another is that Norman Thomas, who is here with us tonight, supported me. If he should do that again this year I'd be sunk sure."

"Don't worry," drily called out Thomas, 1936 Socialist candidate, "I won't. I only support liberals who stay hitched."

Note—Scrappy SEC Commissioner Leon Henderson, a third-term booster, offered to bet Tom Dewey $5 to $1 that the next President "is not in this hall," but the young New Yorker smilingly declined the offer. Henderson had no better luck with any of the other aspirants.

STATE DEPARTMENT FISH

Joe Davies, ex-ambassador to Belgium and now special state department adviser, has been put in a tough spot by his wife's food company operations.

Mrs. Davies, the former Marjorie Post Hutton, is the aunt of Barbara Hutton and the largest stockholder in General Foods, probably the biggest food manufacturing and distributing company in the world.

And it has just been revealed that General Seafoods, a subsidiary company, has negotiated a deal with the government of Newfoundland whereby Newfoundland fish, canned and frozen by Newfoundland labor, will be able to put many New England fisheries almost out of business.

What makes the situation embarrassing for Ambassador Davies is that the deal was negotiated with the co-operation of the state department, of which he is an influential official. What happened was this:

General Seafoods negotiated a contract with Newfoundland whereby the company set up a factory in Newfoundland to can, freeze and process fish. The Newfoundland government subsidized General Seafoods to the tune of $200,000, and in return, General Seafoods agreed to employ only Newfoundland fishermen to catch the fish, and Newfoundland labor in the factory.

In 1794 Congress Grudgingly Voted To Build Six Ships; This Year It Talks About a Billion Dollar Navy!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S budget recommendation of a billion dollar naval program, the largest peacetime sum ever considered for that purpose, is by its sharp contrast, an interesting commentary on the spirit of economy (perhaps "parsimony" would be the more appropriate word) in which provision for our "first line of defense" was conceived 146 years ago.

For it was in March, 1794, that the first congress approved a bill out of which grew the United States navy, albeit its passage was marked by a long and acrimonious debate during which it was declared that "a navy is the most expensive of all means of defense, and the tyranny of governments consists in the expensiveness of their machinery."

Indicative of the grudging spirit in which this first congressional provision for a navy was made is the fact that the bill won in the house of representatives by a vote of 50 to 39 and in the senate the sentiment was so evenly divided that it took the vote of Vice President John Adams to break a tie and pass the measure.

Despite the success of John Paul Jones and other American sea captains against the superior sea forces of England during the Revolution, one of the first acts of congress, after the fight for liberty ended, was to dispense with the services of the victor of the famous Bon Homme Richard-Serapis battle and begin scrapping such war vessels as we had. In doing this congress was only following the wishes of the citizens of the new nation.

But the United States soon learned a bitter lesson from its naval disarmament program. For centuries the Barbary states in northern Africa—Algeria, Tripoli, Tunis and Morocco—had preyed upon the commerce of European countries and, despite the huge indemnities which France, Spain and the Italian states paid to these pirates, their shipping and their coasts were never safe from destructive raids. England, because of her sea power, had suffered but little from these marauders but her former colonial shipping, now flying a new flag, immediately became the prey of the corsairs.

Ask $60,000 Ransom.

In 1785 the Algerian pirates seized two American merchantmen and by the time of Washington's inauguration their 21 officers and men were still held prisoners. The Continental congress had made some efforts in their behalf but these had been contemptuously rejected by the Dey of Algiers who demanded a ransom of nearly $60,000 for his captives. Soon after Thomas Jefferson was appointed secretary of state in Washington's cabinet, he was called upon to report to congress upon the negotiations which he, as minister to France, had carried on with the Algerines.

In 1790 Jefferson submitted a report, remarking that a solution of the problem "rests with congress to decide between war, tribute and ransom. If war, they will consider how far our own resources shall be called forth, and how far they will enable the Executive to engage, in the forms of the Constitution, the cooperation of other Powers. If tribute or ransom, it will rest with them to limit and provide the amount; and with the Executive, observing the same constitutional forms, to make arrangements for employing it to the best advantage."

But congress was slow to take any action. In the meantime, the Algerian pirates continued their raids on American commerce in the Mediterranean until it was almost destroyed. Finally by 1793, when the corsairs had captured 10 more American ships and imprisoned 105 more American sailors, the federal government decided to do something about it. In January, 1794, a committee of the house of representatives brought in a resolution for building four ships of 44 guns and two of 20 guns each for the protection of our commerce.

Debate on the matter began early in February and immediately it became apparent that sentiment was against creating a federal navy. One of the leading opponents was James Madison of Virginia who believed that peace with the pirates "might be purchased for less money than this armament would cost." Another Virginia representative "feared that we were not a match for the Algerines" and a Georgian thought that "bribery alone could purchase security from them." A New Jersey congressman objected to the "establishment of a fleet, because, when once it had been commenced, there would be no end to it."

Smith of Maryland and Fitzsimmons of Pennsylvania, who championed the resolution, and Fisher Ames of Massachusetts, who supported them, called upon Madison to define his position and he proposed a substitute for the resolution. It was that "money should be employed in such a manner as should be found most effectual for obtaining a peace with the Regency of Algiers; and failing of this, that the sum should be applied to the end of obtaining protection from some of the European powers."

Navies "Foolish Things."

This suggestion was denounced as an attempt to get other nations to fight our battles for us but Giles of Virginia came to Madison's support with a statement that he "considered navies altogether as very foolish things. An immense quantity of property was spread on the water for no purpose whatever, which might have been employed by land to the best purpose." As it became clear that the two Virginians were taking an isolationist stand which would make the United States a hermit nation, sentiment began to swing in favor of the original resolution.

Despite the effort of opponents of the bill to delay consideration of it, on March 10, 1794, it came up for final passage in the house. Giles made a last effort to prevent its passage. He argued that fitting out a navy would inevitably involve us in wars with all the European powers. Besides that, it would be a perpetual threat to American liberties.

But despite his eloquent plea, the final vote was 50 in favor and 39 against the measure. It had an even harder struggle in the senate for, as has already been stated, it required the vote of the vice president, as presiding officer over that body, to break the deadlock and concur in the action of the house. However, in order to get the measure passed an amendment had to be tacked on that, if peace terms with the Algerines could be arranged, "no farther proceeding be had under this act."

On March 27, 1794, President Washington signed the act providing for the building of six frigates—the President, the United States, the Chesapeake, the Congress, the Constellation, and the Constitution. However, before they could be completed a treaty of peace was concluded with Algiers in September, 1795, under the terms of which we paid Algiers a total of $642,500 for the ransom of captives, for tribute and for presents to officials. Besides that we agreed to build a frigate for the Algerine navy and also supply naval stores, bringing the total cost of the treaty up to $992,463.25.

By the terms of the amendment to the navy act, we had to stop building vessels for protection of our commerce. Of the five frigates authorized, work on three, the United States, the Constellation and the Constitution, was already under way and eventually they were completed. The timber for the others was sold, except for the ship which was to be presented to the Algerines.

Although the navy act of March 27, 1794, was emasculated by the amendment, nevertheless it marked the real beginning of the American navy and, as such, should be a red letter day on our national calendar. In 1793 France and England were at war again and America soon found itself trying desperately to maintain its neutrality in the conflict. Jay's treaty with England in 1794 put an end to most of the disputes between England and America which grew out of the Revolution and which brought us close to another war with Britain. But the next year the British Orders-in-Council against neutral trade with France raised the war fever in this country again and France, angered by Jay's treaty, did all she could to fan that flame.

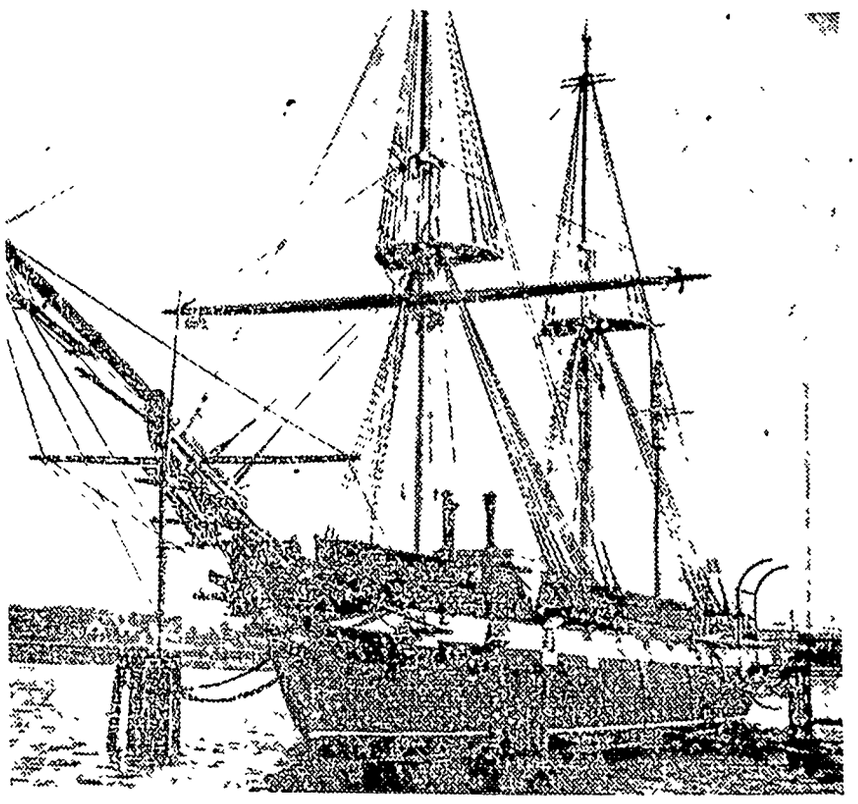
But eventually France overplayed her hand and when her blackmailing schemes were exposed, American sentiment approved the strong stand taken by the new President, John Adams, against our former ally. Not only did congress agree to complete three of the frigates authorized in 1794 at a cost of $1,141,160 but on April 20, 1798, it voted $950,000 for the purchase and equipment of an additional naval force. On April 30 a separate navy department was established (heretofore naval affairs had been administered as a part of the war department) and Benjamin Stoddert was appointed the first secretary of the navy.

A Naval Program.

By this time America was definitely committed to a naval program and on May 4 President Adams was authorized to procure cannon and build foundries and armories. This act was soon followed by an appropriation of $80,000 for galleys to be used "as porcupine quills in punishing enemy attacks." With what was already appropriated, the President was authorized to accept, if offered by private citizens, six frigates and six sloops of war, and to pay for them with government bonds.

Meanwhile France had substituted force for Talleyrand's devious diplomacy and it had seized nearly a thousand American ships. As a result, our alliance with that country, formed during our fight for liberty, was abrogated and in June, 1798, congress authorized the President to use our navy to "subdue, seize, and take any armed French vessel which shall be found within the jurisdictional limits of the United States or elsewhere on the high seas." This was an important step because it said, in effect, that if we were to compel an enemy to do us justice we must no longer depend upon harbor galleys but must send ships swift enough to search out the enemy vessels in their own waters and strong enough to overcome them.

The result was our "undeclared war" with France which continued for two and a half years during which time one of the new frigates, the Constellation, won two brilliant victories over French men-of-war and our little navy captured 85 armed French vessels, nearly all privateers and lost only one war vessel, which had been originally a captured French ship. But despite the lessons learned in this conflict it required two more of them—the War with the Barbary Pirates of 1802-04 and the War of 1812 with England—to teach us the necessity of maintaining an adequate naval establishment if we were, as Washington said, to "secure respect" for our flag and to save it "from insult or aggression."



The Constellation, oldest vessel on the United States navy list, now used as a training ship at the Newport (R. I.) naval training station. In this old frigate Commodore Thomas Truxtun won two great victories over superior ships during our "undeclared war" with France at the beginning of the Nineteenth century.

Although the name of Commodore Thomas Truxtun is but little known to most Americans, yet two victories which he won during our "undeclared war" with France entitle him to a place alongside John Paul Jones, Stephen Decatur, Isaac Hull, James Lawrence, and Oliver Hazard Perry in our galaxy of naval heroes. Early in 1799 Truxtun was placed in command of the Constellation, flagship of a squadron of five vessels which were sent to the West Indies.

At noon on February 9 while the Constellation was cruising off the island of Nevis, a large ship was discovered away to the south. Truxtun immediately gave chase and by the middle of the afternoon he had overhauled the fleeing ship and was engaged in a hot battle with her. Within an hour and a quarter the swift and accurate fire of the American gunners had so shattered the enemy ship that her captain struck his colors.

She proved to be the famous French frigate, La Insurgente, whose loss was 70 men killed and wounded, whereas the only casualties on the Constellation were three wounded.

The captured French ship was put in charge of a prize crew commanded by Lieutenant (later Commodore) John Rodgers and taken to St. Kitt's. When news of Truxtun's victory reached the United States it sent a thrill of joy through the country such as it had not known since the days of John Paul Jones. Truxtun was eulogized in the newspapers, sent "congratulatory addresses" by groups of citizens and received from the merchants of Lloyd's coffee house in London a handsome service of plate worth more than $3,000.

A year later Truxtun gave his fellow-countrymen even more cause for rejoicing. Early on the morning of February 1, 1800, while cruising off Guadeloupe seeking the large French frigate, La Vengeance, which was believed to be in those waters, he discovered a sail to the south which he took to be that of an English merchantman. So he ran up the English colors, but, upon receiving no response, gave chase.

The stranger began piling on sail and for 15 hours succeeded in keeping out of range of the Constellation's guns. Then the American ship came within hailing distance and Truxtun discovered that the stranger was the very ship he was seeking—La Vengeance. At eight o'clock in the evening the Americans opened fire and from that time until one o'clock in the morning the two ships carried on a running fight, sometimes coming within pistol shot of each other.

Suddenly the French frigate ceased firing and disappeared so completely in the gloom that Truxtun believed she had sunk. But at that moment he discovered that nearly all the Constellation's shrouds had been cut away by the fire of the enemy and that her mainmast was about to fall. Soon afterwards a heavy squall came up and the mast went overboard.

Although badly crippled, the French ship managed to reach the safety of a harbor on the coast of South America. There her commander, Captain Pitot, acknowledged that twice during the engagement he had struck his colors but in the gloom of night this signal of surrender was not seen by the Americans.

Once more Truxtun's victory over a superior foe—although La Vengeance carried 54 guns and 400 men, as compared to the Constellation's 32 guns and 300 men, the French loss was 162 killed and wounded while the Americans' was only 14 killed and 25 wounded—sent his name ringing through the United States. Two months later congress authorized the President to present him with a gold medal "emblematical of the late action" with the thanks of the nation, the second time in our history that such an honor was bestowed upon a naval officer.

Two years later Truxtun was ordered to command a squadron destined for service in the Mediterranean. His request for a captain to command his flagship being denied, he declined the service and President Jefferson construed this action as a resignation, which was accepted. Thus the navy lost the services of one of the best officers in its history. Truxtun retired to a farm near Philadelphia and died there May 5, 1822.

1,500,000 BUSHELS OF CORN SEALED BY FARMERS IN HANCOCK COUNTY

The number of bushels of 1939 corn sealed by Hancock County farmers and landowners had reached the 1,500,000 bushel mark by March 1st, according to reports from the Hancock County Agricultural Conservation Committee

All loans on 1939 corn must be completed by March 31st, the deadline date for the 1939-40 loan program, unless notice is received before that time of an extension of the deadline date, James M Townsend, chairman of the committee, stated

It is suggested that farmers wishing to obtain loans on their corn before the closing date, put their applications in at the county agricultural conservation office at Garner within the next few days to allow plenty of time for completion of the loans.

Standard Bearer News

The Klemme Standard Bearers held a most unusual meeting at the church last night. For several years the leading officers in our organization have advocated a "Browsing Table" for library reading in connection with the lessons, so last night we took the opportunity to read to ourselves instead of reading and telling the lesson to others This gave us ample time to look over all the Standard Bearer material we have collected for several years. After reading an hour or more, we had dinner together and then Mrs. Schaeffer led the devotion at which time the girls gave their sacrificial offerings and pledged themselves a new in Christ's Cause and for His sake. The meeting was closed by singing, "Let The Beauty Of Jesus Be Seen In Me"

The following seven cardinal objectives are recognized by all of the educational institutions throughout the nation, and should be the standards of our high school now and in the future years. These objects are:

HEALTH and SAFETY — set our health standards high and improve your habits daily Modern life demands reliable strength and energy, a sound mind in a sound body

WORTHY HOME MEMBERSHIP magnify your home as the center of life that is happy useful and unselfish Home is the soil in which the spirit grows. Give your best.

MASTERY OF THE TOOLS TECHNICS and SPIRIT OF LEARNING — know how to judge, how to observe, to study, to think, to plan and to act. The world is run by thinkers and doers.

VOCATIONAL and ECONOMIC EFFECTIVENESS — find your talents and train them spend wisely, less than you earn FAITHFUL CITIZENSHIP — do something daily to make your school, your community, your state, your country and your world happier, cleaner, quieter, more beautiful, better governed. Each for all and all for each.

WISE USE OF LEISURE — let your daily play be a source of joy and strength, a balance wheel for your work Cultivate growing things, fresh air, sunshine, and simplicity.

ETHICAL CHARACTER — one should search for the hgihest values and build your life according to the best patterns. Read often the lives of great men and women Characteris KING

The different classes are "polishing" up their fancy plays for the class basket ball tournament, which will be held soon.

Last week Thursday we were dismissed slightly earlier than usual, (so we would all be sure to get home for Easter.)

Few bad stitches were found in the Senior Home Ec. girls' silk dresses. All the dresses were eloquent, colossial, super extra-fancy oh well they were cute dresses

The Senior class is starting the rehearsal off Act II of "Big Hearted Herbert".

Everyone in school had his picture taken Wednesday for school records. We may also buy some for our own, if we care to.

CAN YOU IMAGINE

. . . The Girl's Sextette not wanting to sing for any special ocassion?

Allen Barz Keeping perfectly sober in every class?

Marie Schmidt using her own pencils and pens?

Betty Lass not wearing a ribbon in her hair?

How it would feel to go back in an old school building, like we went to last year?

The Senior class ever to arrange a party that every one will attend?

KINDERGARTEN, GRADES 1and 2

Last week we made butter in a little glass churn. Each one of us had a drink of buttermilk in our own paper cup. Then we tasted the butter before and after it was salted. The unsalted butter was rather flat. We saved most of the butter for our mothers' party which we had the next Friday.

We were glad that so many of our mothers came to our party. We had a short program which all centered about the idea of food. This was an outcome of our store activity. Each of us had a job to do to make our party a success. We served crackers and butter and a chocolate Easter candy.

Richard T, Peter, Dorance and Delores have missed school because of Pink Eye.

Luella stayed up the longest in our room in the spelling contest.

We had a little Easter treat in our room Thursday afternoon.

GRADES 3 and 4

We had perfect attendance this week. This is the first time in 1940.

We finished our Clean Hand Health Campaign All our names are on the Health Honor Roll.

In history we finished our unit about Spanish Explorers.

GRADES 5 and 6

We are happy to have Ruth Smith back in school with us. She came back on Monday and is going to school for half a day.

Elizabeth and Ronald celebrated birthdays this week. They treated everyone in the room.

In art classes we drew pictures of rabbits on construction paper Then we pasted cotton on them to make them look like real rabbits.

Perfect spelling scores were earned by Clarence, Roger B Roger R., Mary Lou, Phyllis and Elizabeth

Richard was our reporter.

GRADES 7 and 8

Dot with whole cloves. Return to oven and bake one hour longer, basting frequently with liquid in pan.

HELP!

"The dancers face each other about five feet apart. They stand motionless for a moment, then rear their heads upward and bow low, fingers touching the floor. After a few seconds they arise, then greet each other by rubbing noses. The head is then put under one's left arm, then under the right arm, then raised toward the ceiling. The dancers then hold each other lightly by the waist, suddenly breaking into an extemporaneous bit of hula, and then, just as suddenly, they repeat the dance. This routine is performed three times."—From a description of "The Gooney," the new Hawaiian dance.

Thoughts On a Bank Closing.

Stonington, Connecticut, closed its only bank, the old First National, the other day because of lack of business. Stonington is rarely visited these days except by people who anchor there on a cruise, but it is a quaint New England seacoast town which once knew the pomp and the glory. Swift steamships on the Boston-New York line once made it daily. It was a buzzing ship terminal, and the rotting timbers of its ancient piers are still visible. The town itself still has some of the loveliest dwellings of a former day and it is like stepping into the quiet, calm and orderly past to visit it. Bank my eye! Stonington is too rich in other things to miss it, say we.

Jimmy Roosevelt is in a new movie corporation that proposes to show movie shorts in nickel-in-the-slot machines. It seems to us that he struck a great idea. There ought to be some way a man can see a movie and not see any of the flashes from next week's features.

THE CONTINUING TASK

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 28 16-20
GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be witnesses unto me . unto the uttermost parts of the earth.—Acts 1 8.

World conquest! The dream of dictators and of national leaders down through the ages is to be accomplished, for there is One who has the authority to claim such a place of leadership who will one day rule, for then "the kingdoms of this world" will have become "the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15). While we await His coming to take the throne are we to sit idly by? No indeed, for even now Christ has all authority and He has commissioned His followers to go out and to serve Him in all the world by making disciples in every nation.

I. The Obedient Disciples (vv 16, 17)

The Lord never fails to keep His Word, but often His followers miss great blessing because they fail to keep their appointments with Him. He had told His disciples that after His resurrection He would meet them in Galilee, and we read that they met Him at the appointed place. One trembles to think of what they and we might have missed if they had failed to meet Him.

His promise to us is just as true and definite. "Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18: 20) applies to us today. If we meet Him at the appointed place, blessing will come to us and will flow out through us to all the world.

Observe that "some doubted," that is, they were perplexed and uncertain about the risen Saviour. If they persisted in their lack of faith we know that it must have shut them out of a great blessing, but at the same time it did not hinder the Lord's gracious ministry to His other disciples.

II. The All-Powerful Leader (v. 18)

Quietly and without any fanfare, Jesus announced that all power was given unto Him; or as the Revised Version more appropriately translates the word, "all authority." He does have all power, but He has more. He has the supreme authority which gives Him the right to rule over the entire creation, heaven and earth, spiritual as well as material.

No man in his right mind has ever laid claim to authority over even so much as the earth, but here is One who without hesitation or qualification declares that to Him has been given all authority in heaven as well as in earth, that is, over the entire creation. Surely it is God Himself who here speaks to us.

III. The Great Commission (vv. 19, 20a).

"It is the sublimest of all spectacles to see the risen Christ without money or army or state, charging this band of 500 men and women with world conquest and bringing them to believe it possible and to undertake it with serious passion and power. Pentecost is still to come, but dynamic faith rules on this mountain in Galilee" (Dr. A. T. Robertson).

Such faith and such a commission call for a worldwide mission. The church or individual without a worldwide missionary vision assuredly does not have the viewpoint of Christ. Observe also that it is an evangelistic mission. We are not called to entertain the world, nor primarily to improve the social order. Our business is to "make disciples," that is, true followers of Jesus Christ, which they can only become through accepting Him as Saviour and Lord

Such a ministry will inevitably be a teaching ministry. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). How foolish is the preacher or evangelist who fails to teach the Word of God. It is His appointed method which cannot fail. Christian baptism is also a vital part of the Great Commission. It was first practiced at Pentecost (Acts 2) and later in the Church (Acts 8 and 10)

IV. The Abiding Presence (v 20b).

There is no other statement of fact (for it is more than a promise) anywhere or by anyone that can compare with the assurance of Christ that He is with His witnesses always, even unto the end of the age.

Consider first of all who is to be with us, namely, the Son of God, the risen Christ, the One with all authority in heaven and earth! Then note that He is to be with His disciples "always" How important that is, for as we well know, the inspiration of even the greatest human leader largely goes with him to the grave The Lord Jesus, on the other hand, is with each one of His children always What assurance that fact brings to every witness for Christ as he gives himself joyfully to the carrying out of the Great Commission!

Horses Said to Have Excellent Imaginations

The actual intelligence of a horse is limited, says Arthur J Sarl noted British racing expert in "Horses, Jockeys and Crooks Reminiscences of Thirty Years' Racing." Thoroughbreds are endowed with more brains than cart or farm horses, light or heavy drafts but most big horses seem to have more "savvy" than the little fellows

All horses have good memories, Mr. Sarl says.

"Perhaps you have wondered why some horses prefer certain courses Nine times out of ten you can take it that these horses gained some pleasurable experience at that particular venue," he explains "Maybe they won their race and were patted and fussed over by their trainer or jockey; given an apple, a lump of sugar . . . They can tell good treatment from bad, which accounts for their like and dislike of certain people.

"Horses have great imagination. They magnify everything and become bewildered. They are susceptible to fear. That is why they readily accept the idea of man's superiority. They have a wonderful sense of smell."

Mr. Sarl has seen an animal fall on two occasions at the same fence, with several months between falls.

"The horse remembers the incident, and fear enters into his heart as he approaches the obstacle at the next time of asking," he believes. "His memory of persons, objects and places causes him to have misgivings."

"And doesn't it apply to us humans as well?" Mr. Sarl asks. "What about the boxer who again meets an opponent who has already given him a hiding? It is always odds on the fellow who has done the trick."

'Sweet Smelling' Sam Houston Jones Faces Task in Debt-Ridden Louisiana

By ORRIN HARTMAN
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

BATON ROUGE, LA.—Next May 14 a mild-mannered young lawyer from near the Texas border will take charge of Louisiana's monumental state capitol. From its cavernous halls will scatter the ghosts of 12 Long years.

Out front, in the hero's tomb they built after an assassin's bullet cut short his riotous career, cocky Huey Long will probably turn over in his grave.

Good or bad, Louisiana's new administration will at least be different. The young lawyer is named Sam Houston Jones, because Sam Houston is quite a hero out near the Texas line. The night Sam Jones beat Huey's young brother Earl in a bitter runoff primary, he kept a New Orleans victory celebration waiting. They found him praying in a Methodist church, the sort of thing you'd have expected from a medieval crusader.

Not a Bad Idea.

There are those who vow Louisiana needs a crusader. Some people also call Sam Jones the David who slew a modern Goliath, but 283,384 Louisianians who voted for him were probably just as much against the Long machine as they were for Sam Jones.

Nevertheless he is the flesh-and-blood symbol of a protest against the most amazing political machine America has ever seen. It dates back to 1915 when Huey Long was handling compensation cases for Louisiana lumber mill workers. The idea was something like this: Give everything to the poor at a cost of nothing to them, that is, share the wealth. But to accomplish this you need a kingdom, and to h—l with the expense.

Huey 'Upheld' the People.

In retrospect, now that only the memory remains, Louisianians are recalling Huey's career. They remember how he "upheld the rights of the people" as state railroad commissioner; how he was licked for the governorship in 1924 but came back to win in 1928; how through shrewd political maneuvering he became Louisiana's lord and master. Huey provided free school books. He packed the courts, attacked the corporations and built roads like the state had never seen before. And becoming cock-sure, he could boast. "There are not many people in the United States who are smarter than I am, and none in Louisiana."

GOVERNOR-DESIGNATE—Sam Jones, rated one of Louisiana's best orators, strikes a campaign pose. When Earl Long accused him of being "sweet smelling," Jones' men bought out the dime store perfume counters and thus created a campaign symbol.

Still rising, he got elected United States senator but still controlled a puppet governor and legislature back home. In the national spotlight he became America's No. 1 buffoon and demagogue, filibustering in the senate, threatening to stop federal money from entering Louisiana, calling the President of the United States a liar.

Predicted Machine's Downfall.

And then they "got" the Kingfish—shot him to death—in the 33-story Baton Rouge statehouse which symbolized his stranglehold over Louisiana. He knew it was coming, and he also knew the Long machine couldn't last after his death. Of his lieutenants he said: "Half of them will be in jail after I die. They don't know how to handle this power which I've given them."

Huey was prophetic, but not until last summer did a crusading newspaper editor catch up with the Long crowd. The editor was old Jim Crown of the New Orleans States, whose photographer hid behind a bush to get libel-proof evidence of graft. The picture showed a state university truck being used to haul supplies for the new house of a Long henchman.

To Jim Crown's exploit can be traced the 200 odd indictments that followed; the resignation of Gov. Richard Leche and the ascendency of Earl Long; the flight of graft-guilty Dr. James Monroe Smith, president of the state university who has since been convicted; the suicides of three henchmen; the frightened countenances of countless small fry politicians whose come-uppance now rests in Sam Jones' hands.

Faces Difficult Task.

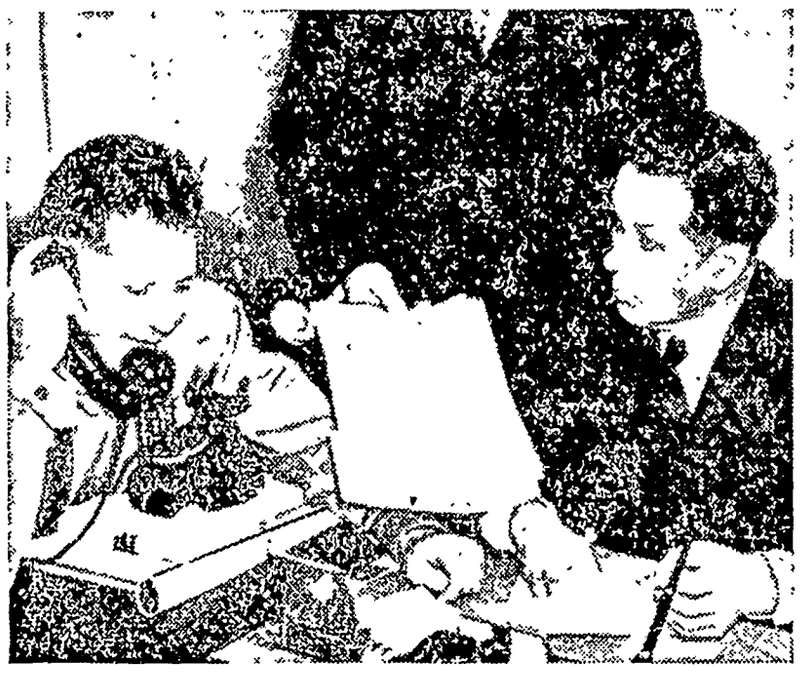
After Mr. Jones left his prayer meeting in New Orleans on victory night, he told the crowd: "I promised to restore honesty and decency in Louisiana government, and anybody who knows Sam Jones knows that he keeps his word."

Governor Jones was speaking boldly, for tax reformers have pointed out the precarious condition of state finances. Twelve years of the Long machine have boosted the bonded debt from $12,000,000 to $200,000,000. Louisianians pay the highest auto license fee in the country and one of the highest gasoline taxes. They are burdened with sales tax tokens and some 25 other new taxes which Huey and his followers used to "soak the rich and share the wealth."

But the ledger is not entirely red, for Huey Long had done something else for Louisiana besides providing folk lore for generations to come. The magnificent state university, the statehouse, good roads and free bridges are assets which partly offset the huge debt.

Vows to 'Cleanse' State.

Sam Jones knows all this but it makes him no less critical of the Long machine. He insists that dictatorial laws must be abolished, that courts must be placed above reproach, and that schools must be revitalized. Says he: "A new day has dawned after a long night with foul things happening in the dark."



RETIRING GOVERNOR—Earl Long (left) once summoned his "rubber stamp" legislature this way. Last time it didn't work. The solons stayed home.

So You Want to Be a Model? New York Tells What It Takes

NEW YORK.—Young ladies: If you're between 19 and 23 with a just-so figure and the knack of posing before a camera without appearing to do so, you may have the makings of a model.

The glamour profession which has attracted hundreds of small town girls to New York isn't what it's cracked up to be, say advertising men and photographers, but if a girl is good she may get a break.

Models fall roughly in two classes. First, the free-lancer who sells her wares at an average rate of $5 per hour and prefers to depend on one-time calls. She is the girl seen on billboards, in magazine ads and newspapers. If she is successful her income will usually range from $50 to $150 a week, but nat for many years.

Some Are Manikins.

The other classification is the fashion manikin who prefers a small but steady income modeling dresses in retail stores. Her figure is apt to be better than the free-lance model, but her face will be less "photogenic."

Even the free-lance photographic models are commonly divided into several classes. The fashion model is the "glamour girl" who seldom smiles, is a little too thin and can wear clothes with indifference. Another type is the "all-American girl" who is deliciously pretty and vivacious, who smiles over her cooling drink from the billboard or frowns over a headache.

They Need All Types.

Another type is the older, more mature models who pin diapers on babies, pose as happy newlyweds and greet their husbands at night. Still a fourth is the character model, ranging from small youngsters to spinsters.

The average model in New York is 23 years old. Her measurements will be: height, 5 feet, 7 inches; bust, 34; waist, 25; hips, 35, and shoe size, 5A. Another type, the "cute" model, has a bust measurement of 32; waist, 23; hips, 34, and size 3½A shoe.

U. S. Drafts Mars Men To Fight Forest Fires

WASHINGTON.—If you see a strange figure parachuting into one of our national forests this summer, it won't necessarily be a man from Mars. More likely it's a "smoke jumper," one of Uncle Sam's new forest fire fighters being placed into service this year.

The "fire jumpers" wear a special two-piece suit of strong duck, with trousers reaching high above the natural waistline

Census Grows Complex As Nation Gets Older

WASHINGTON. — Census taking was a simple job in the days of Washington, Adams and Madison.

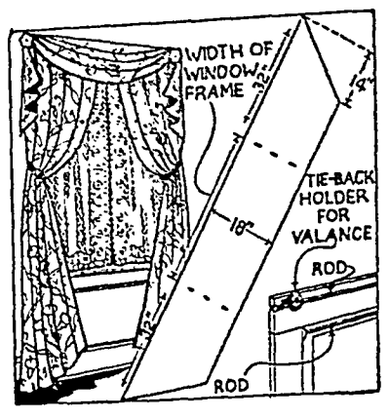
The first census, taken during Washington's administration in 1790, required only the "names of heads of families; free white males of 16 years and up; free white males under 16; free white females; all other persons; slaves."

It wasn't until 1850 that persons more than 15 years old were first required to give their "profession, occupation or trade." At the same time a question was included on the value of real estate owned.

In 1860 was added a question on the value of personal estates. The question regarding the number of months a person has been employed during the year was first asked in 1880. In 1890 the census bureau became concerned about people "suffering from acute or chronic disease."

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



THAT lace curtains are in fashion again is news! This easy-to-make and easy-to-hang valance is something that many of you have been wanting. All the dimensions for cutting it are given here. The glass curtains are hung on the lower rod; the side drapes on the upper rod; and the valance is draped over knob holders screwed into the extreme upper corners of the window frames.

The color plan for this window began with the glazed chintz drapery material in tones of green, beige and golden yellow. The darkest green—a soft olive tone, was used in sateen to line the valance and make the tie-backs. The brass holders for the valance repeated the golden yellow. The cream glass curtains toned into the drapery background, and a plain olive green window shade was used.

In the tumultuous campaign which followed, Harrison and Tyler won an easy victory but within a month after taking the oath of office as President, the aged Indian-fighter, worn out by the demands of Whig office-seekers, died on April 4, 1841.

Upon succeeding to the presidency, Tyler announced that he would retain the cabinet chosen by Harrison and would carry out the latter's policies. What they were, no one knew for the Whig convention had not adopted any platform and in the campaign there was no discussion of issues between the two parties. As a matter of fact, the Whigs had nominated Harrison because they believed he could be "managed" and Henry Clay intended to do the managing.

Early-Day 'Brain Trust.'

Although retaining Harrison's cabinet, Tyler immediately assembled about him a group of unofficial advisers (the first "Brain Trust") which included Prof. Nathaniel Beverly Tucker, professor of law at William and Mary college, who first suggested an Exchequer Bank plan which Tyler later proposed and whose recommendations about a public lands policy were incorporated in the Homestead Law of 1862; Caleb Cushing of Massachusetts, one of the greatest authorities on constitutional law, who was later nominated for chief justice of the Supreme court; Littleton W. Tazewell of Virginia, called by Thomas Jefferson "one of the most brilliant minds I have ever known"; and Robert J. Walker of Mississippi, later President Polk's secretary of the treasury and author of the tariff of 1846, who became Tyler's spokesman in the senate.

As soon as Henry Clay and the other Whig leaders began trying to dictate to Tyler, they discovered that the man in the White House had a mind of his own. They first pushed through a bill to establish a United States bank. Tyler vetoed it, and their effort to pass it over his veto failed. When the Whig leaders reproached Tyler for his action, he reminded them that he had subscribed to no platform and that they should have known his opinions before they nominated him.

Somewhat crestfallen, they asked him for an outline of a bank bill he would sign. The result was Tucker's Exchequer Bank plan, which they changed and pushed through both houses. Thereupon Tyler vetoed it and again an attempt to pass it over his disapproval failed. Then congress passed a protective tariff bill which Tyler vetoed. A program for internal improvements to be financed by the federal government met with the same fate, because Tyler believed that the states should make their own internal improvements.

Swiftly the breach between the President and his party widened. The cabinet, with one exception, resigned. Daniel Webster remained long enough to complete negotiations for the Webster-Ashburton treaty. Then he resigned. The party was beginning its "purge" of its President. Next the Whig newspapers went into action and filled their columns with denunciations of the President. There were even threats of assassination. But Tyler stood firm in his determination to be true to his oath of office. Then 10 members of congress, headed by ex-President John Quincy Adams, now a member of the house of representatives, brought in a report charging Tyler with violating a promise he had made before his nomination and threatening to impeach him. Tyler replied that he had never pledged anything to the Whigs.

Despite this denial, the Whig congressmen issued a series of "Addresses to the People" in which they charged that the President had gone into office fully committed to a program which he now repudiated, thus "selling out the party." They listed the reforms which they desired and which they declared, the President was "impeding." Finally, when Tyler filled his cabinet with Southern Democrats, headed by John C. Calhoun as secretary of state, it was the last straw. The Whigs issued a proclamation that "all political connection between them and John Tyler was at an end from that day henceforth." The party had completely purged its President.

The remainder of Tyler's term of office was marked by the dispute over the slavery question and the annexation of Texas, favored by the Democrats and opposed by the Whigs. Having been "read out of the party," Tyler now had nothing to lose and supported the move for annexation, but without success at first. As the 1844 campaign approached, this question became the principal issue. James K. Polk, the Democratic nominee, indorsed annexation. Tyler had tried to build up a party of his own and seek re-election. Although he was nominated by a small faction, he was persuaded to withdraw from the race and Polk won. Just before leaving office Tyler had the satisfaction of seeing his plan for the annexation of Texas accepted by the Lone Star republic and the next year it came into the Union.

'Robin Hood of Virginia.'

Tyler's political career was now ended. He retired to his home, Sherwood Forest, where, in a facetious mood, he often referred to himself as the "Robin Hood of Virginia." It was during this period of retirement that he accepted the lowly office of road overseer.

Although a Virginian and a slaveholder, Tyler was opposed to the institution of slavery and became president of the African Colonization society, formed with the view of recolonizing the slaves in Africa. Early in his career he looked forward to the time when slavery would disappear from the South as it already had from some of the Northern states but being a strict constructionist he wanted to bring that about by Constitutional means.

As the clouds of the threatened civil war lowered, the ex-President used his influence to help avert it. His last great effort to preserve the Union was as president of the Washington Peace Convention of 1860, assembled in a last-minute effort to seek some compromise between the North and the South. He looked upon the convention as an attempt to preserve the Constitution and the laws of the nation, which he considered the North had sought to ignore, not change.

When his native state seceded, Tyler, like Robert E. Lee, believed that his first duty was to Virginia and he renounced his loyalty to the United States. He was elected to the Confederate congress but died January. 17, 1862, before the congress assembled

Counting Population Is Most Vital Phase Of National Census

(Because the once-in-ten-year census is the government activity that comes most directly home to each of the 132,000,000 of us, the census bureau here explains the vital inquiries made. This article discusses the "population phase" of the census.)

SINCE there is nothing so important in indicating the future of the nation as a complete knowledge of the habits, the characteristics, the purchasing power, the environment and regional distribution of its 132,000,000 people, it follows that the population census is the most vital phase of the 1940 census.

More than 120,000 enumerators will call at every home in the nation and seek information about every occupant during the course of the 1940 count.

Some of the questions that will be asked have been used in nearly every census. These are the questions which identify the individual—where he lives; sex, color, race, age at last birthday; single, married, widowed, divorced; state or country of birth; and citizenship status of foreign-born. Also whether the family lives in a city or on a farm.

Economic Questions Not New.

Three questions asked in the 1940 census of population are calculated to give information touching on the difficult economic conditions through which nearly everyone has been living. Only two of these questions, however, are new. One new question asks each person to report the amount of money wages, or salary received during 1939 up to a maximum of $5,000 and to say whether or not there was an additional income of $50 or more from other sources during the year. The other new question is one asking each person to indicate where he lived on April 1, 1935—five years ago. The third question—thought by many to be new, asking the amount of the mortgage, has been used in previous census.

The census bureau included the first two questions in response to the demands of important groups which felt that knowledge of the average buying power of the people and the facts as to internal migration would help in the study of economic and social problems and contribute to a stimulation of business.

Business 'Asked for It.'

Groups principally responsible for including the income question represented, to a large extent, business. Business, of course, is vastly interested in knowing the potential purchasing power of every community. The best indicator of purchasing power is the level of wages of the rank and file of workers. This question will not seek to obtain definite figures on incomes above $5,000 per year. Those people will simply report "more than $5,000." Business statisticians figure that information on incomes in these higher brackets would not be useful in a study of purchasing power nationally and regionally, because, since trade volume is made up largely of the sale of necessities such as food and clothing, the consumption of these items does not increase relatively as incomes go into the higher brackets.

The principle of the question on personal income in census taking, however, is not new. For more than 20 years the census of agriculture has required farmers to report on income from the sale and use of products. This has been the most vital question in the farm census and the knowledge that nearly one-half of all farms had gross incomes of less than $1,000 a year has been an important basic starting point in efforts to solve the farm problem.

Population Shifts Studied.

Answers to the question "Where did you live five years ago?" will contribute further facts on the study of regional effects of drouth and depression, the decentralization of industry and the shifts of industry, and consequently workers, from one section of the country to another, depending upon the supply of raw material, wage rates, and other factors.

Another question which, however, is not new, will give information on economic conditions. It is the one which asks if the home is owned or rented; how much the home is worth, if owned, and how much rent paid, if rented. As far back as 1850 when Zachary Taylor was President, the census law required each person to indicate the value of real estate owned, and then again in 1860 each person was required to give the value of real estate owned and, in addition, the value of all personal property. The latter part of the question is no longer asked. In the census of 1860 Abraham Lincoln reported the value of his real estate and the value of his personal estate, as did all other persons.

Since unemployment is the nation's major problem, the population census of this year will ask more questions about employment status than any other thing. What to do with the workers who have lost their jobs to machines is one of the toughest puzzles before the nation. Every individual over 14 will be asked the hours worked the week before April 1.

New economic problems created by the unsettled conditions of the last decade have created a special demand for information in this field. It will be of great help to business.

SWEDEN TAKES A HAND

WASHINGTON.—One of the most significant factors behind the Finnish-Russian peace maneuvers is that they have been inspired in large part by the invisible hand of the No. 2 Nazi, Field Marshal Hermann Goering.

Acting for him was the most powerful man in Scandinavia, Axel Wenner Gren, who has been a close friend of the German Air Minister ever since Goering married his first wife, the niece of Swedish Baron Swinging hard for Sweden.

Rosen. Somewhere in the Finnish-Russian peace picture also (though the state department denies it) may be Sumner Welles.

Wenner Gren, who controls the Bofors munitions company and is the richest man in Sweden, was on his yacht, the Southern Cross, in the harbor of Nassau a few weeks ago when he received a coded message from Goering. The cable asked him to take the same ship as Welles took on his peace mission.

Wenner Gren flew to New York, boarded the Rex, and when he got to Rome, saw Mussolini before Welles did.

Then he proceeded through Switzerland with Welles to Berlin, where he still is, and where he has been throwing his weight behind an early peace.

Business Against War.

Goering's and Wenner Gren's interest in Finnish peace is easy to understand. From the viewpoint of the German army it would be just as disastrous to have Russia sweep through Finland and perhaps on to Sweden, as to have the Allies organize an expeditionary force to stop Russia.

In either case, Sweden's rich iron deposits would fall into the hands of a foreign power.

What the German army wants is a relatively tranquil Russia, from which Germany can draw raw materials. Also, the longer Russia is forced to continue fighting, the more vulnerable she becomes in the south, where are located the rich Batum oil fields, now invaluable to Germany.

Similarly, an allied expeditionary force sent through Sweden, perhaps turning that country into a battlefield, would ruin the Wenner Gren interests. He is chairman of the Swedish Cellulose company, took over a large part of the Kreuger interests, and heads the Electrolux company, Swedish parent of the American subsidiaries which make vacuum cleaners and refrigerators.

Note—The peace activity of Axel Wenner Gren illustrates the attitude of big business in both Wall Street and London's City. Unlike the case in the last war, American bankers are ardent rooters for peace. This time not they but Uncle Sam, through Jesse Jones, is lending the money. Not only is there no dough in war, but if Nazi-Communism wins, the capitalistic system stands in danger.

More on Gren.

Axel Wenner Gren, although a friend of Goering's, is quite pro-American. His dark-eyed, fascinating wife comes from Kansas City.

The Wenner Gren yacht, Southern Cross, rescued 376 of the Athenia survivors last September . . . Also it was the home of Greta Garbo during her recent stay in Florida and Bahamian waters. On it Greta ate copiously instead of dieting. Her dietician was trying to get her to put more weight around her shoulders.

Greta's wardrobe aboard the Southern Cross was so meager that she wore slacks most of the time, hardly had an evening dress. Friends attributed this to the fact that she never goes shopping—that means being stared at.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Forthright Governor Stark of Missouri has started a Hatch law of his own. He has ruled that any state official who runs for office must get off the public payroll.

Justice Frank Murphy is having a hard time breaking into the work of the Supreme court. He is automatically barred from sitting in a number of cases, because as attorney general he represented the government in originating them.

The war has created a new concept of transoceanic flying, once considered the height of daring adventure. Today it's the acme of safety, compared to crossing by ship in waters infested with submarines and mines. The transatlantic airline are getting more passengers and mail business than they can handle.

AMOS PLEADS FOR JUSTICE

LESSON TEXT—Amos 5:1, 10-15, 21-24.
GOLDEN TEXT—Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish judgment in the gate.—Amos 5:15.

Social justice, though much spoken about in recent times, has been the concern of right thinking men ever since sin entered the world and started man's inhumanity toward man. In the prophet Amos we find the eloquent and plain-spoken voice of one crying out against such conditions almost 800 years before Christ.

This lesson is one which is of utmost importance because in our present-day struggle with social injustice we have come to assume that it is primarily a political or economic question. Amos and all other Scripture rightly gets at "the focus of infection," which is sin. Sin in the heart leads to sinful actions, and these inevitably involve others, and thus bring about social problems. Let us learn from Amos to cure our social ills by bringing man to God.

I. Lamentation—in the Midst of Prosperity (v. 1).

From the little village of Tekoa and out of the wilderness in which he had been a herdsman came Amos, the man of God, to hurl his prophecy of disaster upon the heads of the complacent people of Israel and to take up a lamentation over those in Israel living in luxury and prosperity.

True it was that the common people were being ground under the heel of cruel oppression, but who cared about the poor as long as they could be squeezed for taxes to support the luxurious comforts and pleasures of the rich? A prosperity which does not reach the homes of the poor is not a real prosperity at all. When in addition thereto it encourages the "haves" to oppress the "have-nots" it becomes a grave danger, a real cause for lamentation.

II. The Reason—Sin Which Hates Reproof (vv. 10-13).

Sin is always a horrible thing, but when men who have fallen into sin are responsive to correction and ready to repent and forsake their sin, there is hope. The thing which made Israel's state so serious in the sight of God and of His prophet was that they had only hatred for those who were bold enough to reprove them or to live among them according to God's standards (vv. 10, 13). "They who will endure no criticism have slammed the door in the face of truth. When we get to the place where we cannot endure having our faults pointed out, we are on the way to moral collapse" (Douglass).

The sin which had thus hardened their hearts showed itself in social inequality and injustice which was built upon greed, oppression, corruption in the courts, etc. The shocking picture which Amos paints bears a surprising similarity to conditions in our world today. Let us face the problem and seek its solution.

III. The Cure—Seek Good Not Evil (vv. 14, 15).

God's Word condemns sin, but it always presents a remedy. In Christ we have the perfect, final, and complete answer to the sin question. Amos, speaking centuries before Christ, admonished Israel to repent and to turn away from the evil which they had cultivated with such assiduity and to be equally zealous about doing good, in the hope that "it may be that the Lord God of hosts will be gracious" (v. 15). How favored we are to be permitted not only to urge people to turn from evil to good, but to offer them the One who is the way, the truth, and the life.

Israel did not repent, but in folly depended on their religious ceremonies to satisfy an offended God. The prophet therefore declares that

IV. Religion Is Not a Substitute for Justice (vv. 21-24).

God had no pleasure in their religious observances and rites, because they were presented with unrepentant hearts and by hands which were soiled by the oppression of their fellow man.

Mark it well, God has no delight in the attendance upon church services, beautiful though they may be, does not listen to the sweet strains of sacred music, nor does He accept the rich "offerings" of those who live in unforsaken sin and who pay for magnificent church buildings and beautiful church services with money gotten by crooked dealings and social injustice. God is righteous and God's Word always cuts right through the hypocrisy of men. Let us heed the plea of Amos, that righteousness should run through our personal and national life "as a mighty stream," and then we shall be ready both as individuals and as a people to worship Him aright.

A Gracious Lord

His work is honorable and glorious, and his righteousness endureth forever. He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered; the Lord is gracious and full of compassion.—Psalm 111:3-4.

The following poem was sent to Iowa schools earlier in the school year, with the following preface by Jessie Parker, State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

To Iowa School People:

In these troubled days when even our happy relationships threaten to break down under the stress of alien pressures and old-world differences, one can enjoy the simple, genuine "American Way" philosophy found in these lines, author unknown.

BILL JONES' NEIGHBORS

I got all kinds of neighbors where
I'm livin' by the crick,
Some Yankees and a Polack, and the Dutch are pretty thick,
And there's seventeen Norwegians that haul milk along the road
And there's Irish, some; and others
I ain't figgered where they growed,
And some of them is different in their livin' ways to mine;
I recon' its their raisin', and I never got a line
Of the half a dozen lingoes heard around a threshing bee,
For I was born a Yankee and that's good enough for me

But somehow when my wife was sick and I was mighty blue.
Then, Hilda, she's my neighbor's gal, come up and pulled us thru
And when I broke my leg last fall an' huskin' not begun,
The Polack brought the Dutchmen and they cribbed 'er number 1
An' when my neighbor's horse got cut and laid up plowin' time,
An Irishman he lent Bill one, and never charged a dime,
An' take 'em all out yonder as fur
as you can see,
The Dutch an' all together is just like you and me

I'm proud that I'm a Yankee, and
Pete's proud that he is Dutch,
But the lingo makes no difference and the creeds don't matter much,
Fur we're goin' to pull together
Yank, Swede Dutch, Mick an'
Finn,
'Till we've sowed a crop of brotherhood and brought the harvest in For that's the way we figger the our boys and girls, 'll get Their chances as we've had ourn and we'll help to fashion it,
And there ain't no man can stop us, an' there an't no one can say That the neighbrs out in -(Iowa) ain't pullin' all one way

NOTHING IN THE PAPER

"There's never a thing in the paper", complained Mrs. Grumble. The Hoisington (Kansas) Dispatch observes she forgt that she had asked to have her bridge party left out of the paper because there were two or three other people whom she should have invited; that the family did not want it mentioned when they bought a new automobile because they still owed the doctor Junior, two or three grocers had been waiting for them to settle for sometime The editor left the daughter's careless driving out of the paper because he was sorry for the old man, he neglected to mention the fact that Mrs Grumble's father died in the penitentiary, that it had been rumored that her husband had been fishing without a license Mrs. Grumble thinks the editor should print more news He probably could — but what if he should!

Maurice Maeterlinck's Great Human Story "The Blue Bird" Portrayed By Brillant Cast

Predictions are abundant at 20th Century-Fox that for many years to come, moviegoers will remember Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" as the most beautiful picture ever made and the most human story ever told That you may see it as it should be seen, it is advisable to come at the beginning of the picture to enjoy to the fullest its mood of rare beauty.

Under the deft direction of Walter Lang, "The Blue Bird" was filmed in the new Technicolor. It is among the first pictures to use this amazing new development and the result is a beauty and fidelity of color hitherto unknown, with a highly increased effect of third dimension that makes the characters on the screen actually come alive before your eyes

"The Blue Bird" comes to the Avery Theatre April 7, 8, and 9

BEST IOWA NUTS ARE WALNUTS, HAZELNUTS

Black walnuts and hazelnuts are among the "best bets" for gardeners who want to raise nut trees, says S W Edgecombe, Iowa State College extension horticultrist Both species are native to Iowa and can be expected to grow satisfactorily with some protection and normal rainfall.

"The nuts which are most suitable for Iowa are crosses or selections from the native specie", Edgecombe point out. "In the case of Black walnuts, the best variety is the Thomas, which is round, thin shelled and of excellent flavor The best hazelnut variety is the Wrinkler."

Since the Wrinkler is self sterile wild hazelnuts must be planted within 10 or 15 feet to insure pollination and "setting" of a nut crop.

In buying nut trees it's a good idea to get grafted varieties. Edgecombe says Farmers who have difficulty finding suitable varieties may obtain names of nurseries from the Extension Service

COBBLER IS THE BEST POTATO FOR IOWA GROWERS

Irish Cobbler and Warba—these are still the two best varieties of potatoes for Iowa growers, says A T. Erwin, head of the vegetable crops research at the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station

The old Irish Cobbler is still the standby for the main market season because of its high yield, superior quality and ability to stand storage The only serious defects of the cobbler are its deep eyes and susceptibility to spindle tuber and scab

The Warba, bearing an Indian name which means "earliest" is an excellent potato for early market and home use It is a white potato The chief defects of the Warba are roughness and deep eyes

Among the new varieties which are recommended for testing and not commercial planting are the Chippewa, a round, white potato with shallow eyes, and the Pontiac a red, oblong potato suggestive of the Early Ohio The Pontiac is quite heat tolerant and a good producer.

Both the Chippwa and Pontiac have been developed by the USDA in cooperation with state experiment stations

Erwin reports that 5,000 seedling tubers developed from new seed crosses made by the USDA in Maine growing in the greenhouses at Ames. They will be planted in northern Iowa for trial this spring

ELECTRIC FENCES ARE EASY TO MOVE, CHEAP

The chief advantages of using an electric fence are its low cost and portability, says Harold Beaty, extension agricultural engineer at Iowa State College

Strip cropping, changing field due to crop rotation, and contour farming have created need for a easily constructed temporary fence The electric fence meets this need and some farmers even feel that it fills the requirements of a permanent structure

Not Permanent

It is unlikely, however, that electric fence will replace all types of fencing For example, an electric fence cannot be depended upon to hold an enraged bull within bounds But a charged wire strung around a substantial bull fence will keep him from daily "toying" with the fence and thus alleviate frequent and irksome repair

Fence energizers now on the market are operated by electric currents of either 6 volts. 32 volts or 110 volts The current of the first two controllers is usually supplied by storage batteries, while the 110-volt unit is operated from an electric high line

Some Danger

An electric fence. Beaty warns, is an instrument which should be designed by one who has a thorough knowledge of electricity A man or an animal may be killed by a fraction of an ampere of current. It is estimated that 0 01 of an ampere is as high a current as can safely be contacted.

SPORTS

The wind up of the basket ball season in Klemme came when the Class Tournaments were held. In the practice games which were played, we could readily see that the games would be very close, and truly they were The first game was very close, the one between the juniors and the sophomores. It finally ended up in an overtime period with the juniors taking the battle The score was 17 to 16 The next game, between the freshman and seniors was very evenly fought, but because of the senior height, which averages over six feet, they won out 19 to 14.

In the consolation game, the freshman out scored the sophomores by two points to stand in third place In the final play-off between the juniors and senior there was a very rough game, with most of the boys having three and four fouls on them Again the seniors came through with a sixteen point margin to win top honors.

MUSIC HIGHLIGHTS

This is a big week for the music students, as the Preliminary Music Contest will be held at Clear Lake April 4, 5, and 6 Sessions will begin at 8 30 a m, 1.00 p. m. and 7 00 p m The schools that are competing with Klemme are Corwith, Geneva, Kanawha, Kensett Plymouth, Rockwell, Sheffield Thompson Ventura, and Manly Admission will be 20c in the morning and 30c in the afternoon and evening.

Klemme will have students in the following Mezzo-Soprano Solo, Elsie Thieman, Brass Sextet; Girl's Glee Club Mixed Quartet; Marimba Solo, Irene Becker; Trombone Solo, Elsie Ward, Klemme Concert Band, Mixed Chorus, Violin Solo Jacueline Kudje; Clarinet Quartet, and Girl's Sextet.

We're all hoping that Klemme will be able to bring home a lot of SUPERIORS, so we can go to West Waterloo, to the State Music Contest. GOOD LUCK!

We're all wondering if Mr Batchelder meant it when he said that if the band won, we would stay at Waterloo for a whole week

DRAMATICS

It has been an open question as to whether Father or Mother knows best how to bring up the children Some say one thing, some say another. Sophie Kerr and Anna Steese Richardson, the authors, seem to side with Mother and prove their point very logically and entertainingly in their uproariously funny play entitled 'Big Heatred Herbert".

Herbert may be a great man in his factory, but at home he seems to be able to adjust his veiwpoint toward the rising generation, and the result is an evening of unbounded pleasure to the people who are going to attend this three-act comedy.

Watch for further details, and the date on which this play will be presented.

Grade School News

KINDERGARTEN, GRADES 1and 2

The first grade made up the following poems. The first poem is about Peter's dog, the second Ruth's doll, and the last poem is Harley's.

Peter has a doggie,
Who likes to run around,
And many, many times he
Jumps and knocks me down.

I have a little dolly.
Her hair is a pretty brown.
I like to play with her
And carry her to town.

My little brother is very fat,
I like to play with him.
But pulling him in the wagon,
Takes a lot of wind.

The first grade played the story "Fun In The Rain" for the Kindergarten and second grades.

GRADES 3 and 4

Fourth grade took their 13th number drill. We had an average score. Donald Kimball and Velma Tiggerman had ratings of Excellent.

What Every Good Cook Should Know

the eggs until thick and lem- ed. Gradually beat in the sifted sugar, and continue beating until the mixture is very fluffy. Add vanilla. Sift together the flour, baking powder and salt, and fold into the first mixture. Line a shallow baking pan (about 10 by 16 by 1 inches) with greased waxed paper. Spread batter evenly in the pan and bake in a moderately hot oven (400 degrees) for 12 to 15 minutes. As soon as the cake is removed from the oven, turn it out on a towel which has been wrung out of warm water. Remove the paper, and trim off the crisp edges of the cake. Roll up in the towel. Let stand several minutes, then unroll and spread with filling. Roll again.

Custard Pie

2 cups milk
3 eggs
¼ tablespoon salt
5 tablespoons sugar

Scald milk. Beat the eggs light, add sugar and salt, and mix carefully. Add scalded milk. Strain into a well-greased pie pan and bake in a slow oven (300 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 40 minutes, or until custard is firm. Bake a one-crust pastry shell in a second pie tin exactly the same size as that used for the custard pie. When the custard and baked pie shell are both thoroughly cooled, gently slip the custard pie into the pie shell just before serving. Note: This eliminates the soggy pie crust so often found in custard pies.

Jiffy Cake With Self Icing.
(Makes one 8-inch cake)

¼ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
½ cup milk
1 teaspoon flavoring extract
1½ cups flour (cake flour preferred)
1½ teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt

Soften the butter by creaming. Then add sugar, unbeaten eggs, milk, flavoring extract, and the dry ingredients which have been sifted together. With a rotary beater or electric mixer, beat for 2 to 3 minutes, or until the batter is light and very smooth. Pour into greased pan 8 by 8 by 2 inches square, and cover evenly with the following mixture:

½ cup sweet chocolate (grated)
½ cup nut meats (cut fine)

Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for 35 to 40 minutes.

Maple Syrup Muffins.
(Makes 12 muffins)

1 egg
½ cup milk
½ cup maple syrup
¼ cup butter (melted)
2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt

Beat egg until very light and blend with milk, syrup and melted butter. Sift dry ingredients and add to first mixture. Blend until the batter is smooth. Pour into greased muffin pans and bake in a moderately hot oven (400 degrees) for about 20 minutes.

IMAGINARY DIARY OF SUMNER WELLES

MON.—Arrived in Italy okay. Was notified that Mussolini was busy reviewing a new goose step but that Count Ciano would see me. Nearly started a new war by absent-mindedly asking hotel manager if he knew where I could get a good Italian dinner.

* * *

TUES.—Was late reaching parley with Ciano because of streets being blocked by parades. Found Ciano so peaceful he dispensed with usual Italian custom of starting to argue before hearing the subject announced.

The count says Mussolini wants peace as soon as he is sufficiently armed for it.

WED.—Traveling through Switzerland. The Swiss are so peaceful I am wondering if other countries would be less belligerent if they yodelled.

* * *

THURS.—I see Goering and Hitler soon. The prospect is quite unnerving.

FRI.—Saw General Goering. Both of him. He wanted to know if I was H. G. Wells or Orson Welles. It was hard to get down to peace talk as he wanted to discuss spring styles in men's military coats. He said Germany was not opposed to peace unless it meant she would have to get along without quarreling with everybody. I asked him if he thought Hitler might retire to the background. He said, "Can you imagine any prima donna retiring to any background?" I had an uncomfortable feeling that there was something under my chair. It turned out to be Goebbels. As I left Goering he said, "Remember us to Roosevelt and tell him not to get discouraged; he'll get into this mess yet."

* * *

LATER.—Met Hitler in the Rumpus Room. He asked me how America was and said he was sorry to hear it.

He then asked for an explanation of the peace idea. I told him Mr. Roosevelt felt peace would be a good thing. He replied, "When I've been in as many fights as Roosevelt I'll think so, too."

He suggested that we carry on our discussions in Russian. I said I did not understand Russian. He said, "Neither do I, but a peace conference is a conference." One word from me led to another. In fact it led to a dozen others. Hitler said Germany was always for peace and that if her artillery held out she would get it.

He kept fumbling with a microphone during the entire talk and once remarked, "If television was here I could conquer the world in six weeks."

MON.—Arrived in Paris. Daladier said France was not only for peace now, but had been hoping for it for centuries.

* * *

TUES.—In London. Saw Chamberlain. He suggested that we hold discussions in English. I said this might commit us to a clear understanding of what we were saying. He saw the danger of this at once.

I am to see him again tomorrow. I can't escape the conclusion that everybody in Europe is in favor of peace up to the point where peace is proposed.

WHAT! NO SMELT?

The Smithsonian Institution, believe it or not, publishes a catalogue listing the fishes taken on President Roosevelt's cruises. (This department has actually seen the one for 1938.) What's more, the President always brings back fish for the Smithsonian Institution to keep. We note that Franklin is represented in the Smithsonian by the Muraenidae (morays), a Sphyraenidae (barracuda), an Acanthocybium petus and, honestly, one Haemulidae or grunt, as most fishermen call 'em.

PATTERN SEWING CIRCLE DEPARTMENT

THERE are two styles that you know right now you'll need, even if your Spring wardrobe is not entirely settled in your own mind! During the months to come, you'll want several free-and-easy sleeveless tennis frocks; and even before that, you'll want at least one "little suit" for street and runabout. Well, here they both are, in this truly money-saving pattern (8597). The tennis frock has a swing skirt, wide, inset belt and strap back. Add the pinch-waisted little jacket-blouse (the fitting is all by means of easy darts) and there's your suit-frock.

What's more, you can make the jacket-blouse two ways—with scalloped sleeves and neckline, and with a naive, round collar. So you can see what a help this clever pattern will be! Perfect for summertime in sports cottons, it will be very smart for right now in silk print, tie silk or flat crepe.

Pattern No. 8597 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 2½ yards of 39-inch material for frock; 1⅝ yards for jacket-blouse; 3 yards trimming.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Keep brass articles from tarnishing by covering them with a thin coat of clear varnish. The varnish will form a lacquer which will not wear off unless the brass is handled frequently.

* * *

To clean gas stove burners boil them in a strong solution of washing soda and water for about half an hour. This will remove all the grease. Rinse thoroughly, dry and put back into the stove.

* * *

Hotbeds are coldframes with heat added. This may be from animal manure, hot water or electricity. The difference between the two is the presence of the heating unit.

* * *

Orange and tomato juices lose much of their nutritive value after they have been exposed to the air for several hours. Consequently it is a good plan to prepare them just before serving. Buy tomato juice in cans which hold an amount that will be quickly consumed after they are opened.

BILL JOHNSON'S CAR ON A RAMPAGE FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Bill Johnson's car cut some fancy capers around the Farmers' Elevator and the Klemme Auto Company garage last Friday afternoon that had that end of town pop-eyed with amazement.

The feature attraction started when Bill came out of the elevator to start his car which was parked near the office. As the starter was not in working order, Bill used the crank to start his car. Evidently he left it in reverse gear, because when Bill twisted the crank, the car backed away . . . at a lively clip, taking a zig-zag course across the street toward the lumber yard, then cut a few fancy capers and swerved toward the garage, narrowly missing the garage wrecker and a new demonstrator. The runaway car then changed tactics and made a majestic sweep, dodging between a fire hydrant and a steel sign pole in front of the Standard Station. The car came to rest after hitting and demolishing a small tree on the east side of the lumber yard office.

Overshoes...

A lowly pair of overshoes is credited with saving the life of young Mervin Hudson, of Wellman The lad was playing with a bottle to which he had tied a length of copper wire. He tossed the bottle into the air and the copper wire brushed against a high tension line Passerby heard Mervin scream, picked him up and carried him to the doctor His hands and feet were badly burned and three holes were burned in his rubber overshoes. Had his feet been more thoroughly grounded. it is believed he would have been killed.

CUT HOG GROWING COSTS WITH GRASS

Good pasture for hogs is one way of really cutting pork production costs, suggests A. L. Anderson, animal husbandry specialist at Iowa State College

Anderson points to the results of 18 swine feeding demontsrations conducted on Iowa farms by Iowa State College in which pastures were used. Eight of these pastures were poor to fair in quality, largely of bluegrass. Ten of the pastures were good, consisting of alfalfa, red clover and rape.

Rich In Protein

The same rations were used on all pastures. The pigs on poor pastures fed corn and minerals, made an average gain of .76 pounds while on good pastures, the daily gain was 1.36 pounds, or two-thirds more.

"Good pasture is one of the best sources of easily digested protein," Anderson said. "Rich in lime and phosphorus, the legumes provide minerals which are easily assimilated by young pigs."

Alfalfa Is Best

He pointed out that since the protein content of young grass is high, less high-priced protein supplement need be purchased.

Alfalfa heads the list of crops suitable for hog pasture. Red Clover ranks along with alfalfa, but is likely to become dry and fibrous in late summer. Rape is approximately equal to alfalfaa or red clover. Bluegrass is excellent in spring and early summer, but it is poor during July and August, then usually good again in the fall if there is sufficient rain.

Saturday April 6th was the 30th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Will Lemke and the 36th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs Rhine Lemke.

To celebrate the double event, a family gathering was held Sunday at the Will Lemke home, where a dinner was served.

Those present included: Mr and Mrs. Monnie Mitchell, Helen and Billy Lemke of Mason City; Mr and Mrs. Arnold Volkman of Nora Springs; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bohn, Betty Lou and Richard; Mr and Mrs. Dick Clark; of Garner; Mr. and Mrs. Will Beier of Goodell; Mr. and Mrs. Rhine Lemke, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Lemke, Mr and Mrs. John Lemke, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lemke, and Joan, Mr. and Mrs. Rueben Lemke, Gordon and Beverly, Mr and Mrs. Wayne Lemke, Sharon and Larry, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Swanson and Janice, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lemke and Mr. Joe Blanchett.

The several families brought baskets of food for the dinner, and Mrs. Mitchell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Lemke, baked and decorated a three-tier cake for the occasion.

Shorter Hours.

Members of the Floyd County Private Duty Nurses Association contend that, to do a good job of private nursing, they need more than seven hours of sleep. Seven hours is about all they receive under the present 24-hour day schedule, they say, and that's the reason they are going to adopt a 12-hour day schedule. Pay will remain the same.

FARMERS' INCOME OUTLOOK FOR 1940 IS GOOD

This should be another "big year" for Iowa farmers in terms of total income if consumer demand for farm products makes the improvement expected.

The outlook for an income almost as large as in 1939—when farmers received the biggest returns in 10 years—is still favorable", says Lauren K. Soth, Iowa State College extension agricultural economist.

Both the Agricultural Marketing Service's report of planting intentions and reports from the AAA point toward widespread participation in the adjustment program This will mean large government payments in Iowa again this year.

"This, together with prospective heavy marketings of cattle and hogs," Soth says, "adds up to another big income year."

An Iowa Farmer?

This one comes from Herman Steen, vice-president of the Miller's National Federation: A grain man traveling in Egypt was shown a mummy. The mummy had its fingers closed tightly over a handful of wheat, which the guide said was 2,000 years old. "He must have been a farmer," said the grain man. "Wonder what price he was holding for?"

WATCH OUT FOR CHILDREN

When there is a child anywhere in sight, slow down, and be prepared to stop quickly. Even if children are playing on the parking, it's safer to drive slowly, for a youngster may thoughtlessly run out in front of your car. Nothing is so important as to warrant taking a chance on injuring a child.

Horse-and-Buggy Customs Return As Britain Feels Pressure of War

By GRANT BUCKINGHAM
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

LONDON.—One year ago the average Britisher would have scoffed at the suggestion that he would soon discard his automobile for a horse-drawn dogcart.

Equally outlandish would be the suggestion that he'd return to the simple evenings before the fireside which characterized an earlier generation.

Today, after seven months of war, the Britisher is doing both.

Blackouts, gasoline rationing and other restrictions have shaken the years from England's shoulders and revived the national customs of two or three decades ago What's more, England is not complaining.

Some Lose, Others Gain.

The blackouts which descend at nightfall over London and other principal cities have created an entirely new technique of living, working and playing in which the gods of war have dictated almost every feature of the national existence. Many have lost by it, yet—paraodxically—others have profited. Moving picture theaters in metropolitan London are suffering the leanest period in their history because movie-goers hesitate to grope their way very far through inky blackness. Conversely, suburban theaters near the residential sections are booming.

How to spend time at home is an acute social problem for the English, who like Americans are accustomed to venturing abroad during the evening hours. Many old customs have been revived and the radio, once merely an idle-hour instrument, has become an essential feature of the evening's entertainment.

Shutters Must Be Closed.

Long discarded games like cards and dartboard have been resurrected from the attic and are enjoyed behind carefully sealed windows. Should light penetrate into the street and up to the sky, the British fear German air raiders might drop their deadly bombs.

Music, especially the home variety, has enjoyed a marked rebirth. Englishmen who can afford it are buying small pianos, and not the least to profit by this trend are the correspondence school piano teachers. On the other hand, regular personal music instructors are suffering because children have been evacuated from the major cities.

Many family orchestras have been organized, and small groups gather each evening for family and community song-fests. Another old custom revived is that of taking turns reading aloud before a group gathered around the fireside.

Blackouts have boomed astronomy, because there is no longer any distraction from the shimmering glow of lights from nearby cities.

'—If There's a Moon.'

Only when the moon is bright do the English travel about at night, and many evening invitations are accepted with the proviso that the guest will come "if there's a moon." So great is the night travel problem that most London business firms sent their employees home two hours earlier during the short winter days, getting them home before the blackout fell.

Though the blackout has apparently segregated and isolated family groups, other war measures have added to the community spirit. Many families whose children and grandparents were evacuated to the country have joined their remnants under a single roof, cutting their living expenses and enjoying each other's company during the long and cheerless evening.

Insomniacs Woo Sleep With Army of Gadgets

NEW YORK.—It is estimated there are 630 sleep-producing items on the market to help the nation's 3,500,000 inveterate insomniacs go to sleep at night. They range from phonograph records to eye shades, the former being a recording of Handel's "Largo" in which a soothing speaker chants instructions on how "to experience the divine blessing of refreshing sleep."

So great is interest in this subject that this spring Columbia university is offering a course in "how to sleep" through Yogian methods.

Most numerous are the ancient home remedies for insomnia. One calls for going to bed wearing dripping-wet socks, the theory being that cold water draws blood from the head.

Benjamin Franklin slept in four beds each night, believing that a major cause of sleeplessness was the accumulation of body heat under the blanket.

Is Silk Stocking Era Passing? New Hose Will Soon Tell Story

WASHINGTON. — About May 15 several million American women will begin testing a product on whose success or failure hinges the future of Japan's $100,000,000-a-year silk trade with the United States.

Stockings made of various natural and synthetic substances will go on the market then, designed to replace the unglamorous silk worm whose glamorous product has sheathed shapely American legs for many years.

There will be stockings made of coal, air and water—a product trademarked "nylon."

Others are made from rubber, some from resin and still others from cotton camouflaged so skillfully that it doesn't look like cotton.

If these substitutes are successful the $500,000,000-a-year American silk stocking industry will be reshaped overnight.

Can It Replace Silk?

Women are watching the experiment with mingled caution and interest, because no stocking material has yet been devised that will flatter their legs like silk. In 1938 it accounted for 88 per cent of all stockings sold. It has been at once the most luxurious and pestiferous item on milady's budget, for silk's cobwebby texture will snag and run at the touch of a rough fingernail.

Nylon, most publicized of the new products, was perfected in duPont laboratories and is now being tested under actual wearing conditions. To develop it chemists discovered how to mix coal with air and water, extruding the mixture into filaments stronger than steel and sometimes as fine as a spider web.

Sheerer Than Silk.

In many ways nylon resembles silk, overcoming some of its faults yet presenting a few new ones which silk doesn't have. Nylon stockings can be knit even sheerer than silk and don't snag so easily, but once they do the run develops more quickly. They won't spot when splashed by rain or snow because they're water-resistant. But by the same token they're not so comfortable as silk, feeling a bit metallic and cold to the skin. Since they absorb only 3 per cent of perspiration, they may also feel a bit clammy in hot weather.

So confident are its sponsors of nylon's success that factories costing $11,000,000 are now being built. About 4,000,000 pounds of the stuff will be processed this year.

Another synthetic stocking is that made of resin dust mixed with salt, natural gas, coal and oil. The chemists who produced it expect to turn out 2,000,000 pounds a year for rope, fish nets, sails and women's hose.

SPEAKING OF HIGH STANDARDS—Miss Virginia Phelan, secretary of the National Research association, shown at the bureau of standards wearing a pair of hose which were to be tested on the new "snag resistance tester." The machine has a sharp point for snagging the stockings. Snag resistance is measured and recorded.

Rubber Hose a Novelty.

Rubber stockings now on the market are knit in lacy meshes and have attracted attention as a novelty because they stretch to fit the leg snugly.

From the American farmers' standpoint, the most important hosiery development concerns cotton, which the government is trying to convert into a beautiful and popular stocking material. Directed by David H. Young, veteran hosiery designer, weavers have perfected 50 or more designs ranging from herringbone to stripes.

Getting Married Is Expensive, Even in Leap Year; Survey Places Cost of Church Wedding at $675

FRESNO, CALIF.—It may be leap year but that doesn't cut the cost of getting married.

According to Miss Lorraine Cederquist, student in the home economics department at Fresno State college, a modern church wedding in 1940 will cost the bridegroom a cool $406.75 and the bride $268.50.

Here's how she figured it:

Bride's expenses: Dress, $25; veil, $18.50; bouquet for maid of honor, $3; five bouquets for the bridesmaids, $12.50; flowers for the church, $15; flowers for the reception, $10; candles, $2; wedding invitations, 200, costing $14; 18 wedding pictures, $40; gifts for waitresses and kitchen assistants, $9, and her trousseau, $75. She must also provide about $40 for food at the wedding reception.

THE QUESTION THAT'S DRIVING US MAD

Problem Number One now facing all Americans is "How to Behave and What to Say" to the question, "Do you think Roosevelt wants a third term?"

The question is becoming irritating. It is driving many people mad to the point of violence. A survey by this department shows that more people go around asking "Do you think Roosevelt wants a third term?' than any other question, including "What time is it?" and "How is business?"

* * *

An Elmer Twitchell Poll shows the following interesting standing of leading questions as of the past week:

"Do you think Roosevelt w. a. t. t.?"	11,546,789
"Did you ever see a winter like this?"	6,785,432
"Do you think things are any better?"	5,935,824
"Do you think there is any chance of peace by spring over there?"	5,436,890
"Am I lifting my head or is it my grip on the club?"	1,456,233

The interrogation is becoming a menace. It is getting on the nerves of America. The Twitchell Poll showed that 550,634 persons interviewed last week favored bashing the head of the person asking the question; 134,588 favored throttling; 25,678 were for the use of firearms.

* * *

Mr. Twitchell thinks there will be wide bloodshed if something isn't done about the matter. Always against violence, he believes the thing to do when anybody asks the question is to stare at the person intently and make no reply at first. When the person repeats the question he would answer: "Oh, I don't know. You've got to remember that the Yanks are a terrific hitting club."

* * *

But this course has its drawbacks. It foils the questioner, but is a strain on the other party. This column has asked some leading citizens what they now say when anybody chirps, "Do you think Roosevelt, etc."

John Hamilton: "I just say, 'I'm all right; how are you feeling?' "

Al Smith: "My answer is always, 'It depends whether it's on white or rye bread.' "

Nicholas Murray Butler: "When anybody asks me 'Do you think Roosevelt will run again?' I just yawn and say, 'I don't know; I'm a stranger here myself.' "

Congressman Dies: "I just ask questions, I don't answer 'em."

Greta Garbo: "When anybody esk me if Roosevelt bane run again I always say, 'No; Jimmy no want it any more; he is satisfied to stay in Hollywood.' "

* * *

So there you are.

"Looka, Marge. Here's a picture of Queen Mary."

"Whaddaya know about that! She looks just like Edna May Oliver."

* * *

"I hear M. G. M. is making a picture on 'The Life of the Bee.' "

"Yeah. But how are they going to work Tyrone Power into that one?"

* * *

Adolf, the dispatches say, has lost weight. That uniform he was never going to take off until Germany had won the war will present a serious problem. It's pretty hard to take in the slack of a pair of pants when they're still on the wearer.

* * *

When Hitler started the war he declared that he had put on his army uniform and would never remove it until Germany had won. It must be sticking to the skin a little now.

* * *

Mr. Chamberlain warns the British people that the war may start in earnest. We always had an idea this war might develop into a war.

THE REAL BLITZKRIEG

The United States has an airplane that will fly seven miles a minute and carries a cannon and four machine guns. If it only had a lady with an open umbrella it would terrorize the world.

* * *

A federal agency is investigating insurance companies. Insurance men must have slowed up a lot. If they were in old-time form they would have sold new policies to each investigator before the hearing had been under way a half hour.

WHO GETS THE PLANES?

WASHINGTON. — Backstage, all the stew over whether the allies are getting planes ahead of the U. S. army and navy boils down to a personal vendetta between the secretary of war and the secretary of the treasury, plus some needling by younger army air corps officers.

It happens that Treasury Boss Henry Morgenthau asked for and got the job of co-ordinating airplane purchases, and his bouncing little cabinet colleague, Henry Woodring, didn't like it. If you note the congressmen who are stirring up the investigation on Capitol Hill, they are chiefly friends of Secretary Woodring.

Real fact is that although Morgenthau has made some minor mistakes, his chief error has been in offending people. Army and navy plane purchases have not suffered. Both Secretary of the Navy Edison and Assistant War Secretary Johnson, who has charge of purchases, testify to this.

U. S. planes have been delivered on time, and no secret planes are getting to the allies.

Morgenthau's chief boner was in asking the quartermaster general of the army, Maj. Gen. Henry Gibbins, and the paymaster general of the navy, Rear Adm. Ray Spear, to sit in on his allied purchasing coordniating committee. Neither one knows anything about airplanes. Younger officers in the air corps resent this, and have been squawking, though the able chief of air corps, General Arnold, hasn't.

Worried Morgenthau.

Morgenthau got into the airplane picture because this is the one big commodity the allies are purchasing and he told the President he didn't want their financing operations to upset the U. S. money market. To pay for the planes, the allies are dumping American securities, plus U. S. government bonds and Morgenthau didn't want them to depress his own government offerings. (He has to issue new ones constantly.)

Siding with Morgenthau are several big shot army-navy men, including Johnson and Edison, who say that the more planes the allies buy here, the more it helps the U. S. army and navy to develop better planes.

For instance, the Glenn Martin company is building a brand new bomber for the French. But as a partial result of experimenting for the French, Martin also has developed a new bomber for the U. S. which will almost fly circles around the French planes.

Also Lockheed is selling several hundred tip-top planes to the British and French. This has helped it develop a new pursuit plane, which will make about 400 miles per hour. It is the first twin-motored pursuit plane, has a liquid-cooled engine and is expected to astound the world's fighting forces.

Birney's Liberty Party, Formed in 1840, Was Twice Defeated but It Raised an Issue That Triumphed Twenty Years Later

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

ONE hundred years ago the United States was engaged in its most uproarious Presidential contest. It has come down in history as the "Log Cabin-Hard Cider" campaign of 1840, in which emotion almost completely replaced reason, issues were totally ignored and a tired old man, who was little fitted for the office of President, was swept into the White House on a tide of slogans and songs. When it ended, the country learned that the "singing Whigs" roaring out to the tune of "The Little Pig's Tail," this song:

What has caused this great commotion-motion-motion
Our country through?
It is the ball a-rolling on
For Tippecanoe and Tyler, too.
And with them we'll beat little Van.

Van, Van, is a used-up man.

were true prophets. For President Martin Van Buren, seeking re-election as the Democratic candidate, was indeed a "used-up man." He had captured only 60 electoral votes to 234 for Gen. William Henry Harrison, "Old Tippecanoe."

Almost forgotten in the midst of all this hurly-burly, because he had failed to win a single electoral vote and had mustered only 7,059 popular votes (compared to Harrison's 1,275,017 and Van Buren's 1,128,702), was another candidate for President. Yet he was a significant figure in American history because he stood for a principle which would provide the most important issue in American politics during the next two decades, result eventually in the greatest civil war in history and be one of the cornerstones in the foundation of a new political party which would rule this country for 56 of the next 72 years. His name was James Gillespie Birney and he was the candidate of the Liberty party, organized on April 1, 1840.

Birney was born at Danville, Ky., on February 4, 1792, the son of one of the richest men in the Bluegrass state. At the age of 11 he was sent to Transylvania college at Lexington and after finishing there studied at the College of New Jersey, now Princeton university, where he was graduated in 1810. After studying law for three years under Alexander J. Dallas, he was admitted to the bar and returned to his home in Kentucky to practice. In 1814 he became a member of the town council and two years later, although he was barely the constitutional age for membership, was elected to the lower house of the Kentucky assembly.

Birney's people were slaveholders but disapproved of the institution of slavery and were willing to emancipate their Negroes if Kentucky could be made a free state. Therefore it was only natural that the young legislator, early in his term in office should lead the movement to prevent the governor of Kentucky from entering into correspondence with the governors of neighboring states to make an arrangement for the capture and return of runaway slaves.

Martin Van Buren

Moves to Alabama.

Evidently Birney's action made him unpopular with the voters in his district for he did not run for the legislature again but moved to Huntsville, Ala., in 1818 and had a prominent part in shaping the constitution under which Alabama came into the Union. He was a member of the state's first legislature but wrecked his political career in 1819 by opposing the legislature's indorsement of Andrew Jackson for President.

Having run into debt, Birney was forced to return to the practice of law and was soon elected by the legislature as solicitor of the Fifth Alabama district. He next disposed of his plantation and slaves to a friend who, he was confident, would treat them kindly. By devoting all of his time and energy to his law practice he was soon prosperous again.

While serving as attorney for the Cherokee Indians who occupied the northeastern part of Alabama, he began the first of the humanitarian enterprises which were to characterize his whole career. He helped the Cherokees adopt a more civilized way of life and paid the expenses of many of the Indian girls who entered the Huntsville Female seminary to get an education. To aid the movement to colonize emancipated slaves in Africa Birney raised funds for the American Colonization society and he also used his influence to secure the passage of an act by the Alabama legislature forbidding the importation of slaves into that state.

In 1830 Birney organized a colonization society in Huntsville and acted as its treasurer for several years. Meanwhile he was busy with plans for uniting in one party all men, both Northern and Southern, who were in favor of preventing the extension of slavery. Finding that there was little support for such an idea in the South, he decided to move to a free state but his appointment as agent of the American Colonization society kept him in Huntsville for nearly two years longer. Then he resigned and bought a farm adjoining his father's near Danville, Ky., declaring that that state was the best in the Union for taking a stand against slavery.

John P. Hale

In December, 1832, he helped promote a convention in Lexington to form a society for the gradual emancipation of the slaves. But he learned to his sorrow that his old Kentucky friends were turning against him and only nine persons attended his convention. Undiscouraged by this fact, Birney next organized a society to attempt the emancipation of the children of slaves when they reached the age of 21.

He Becomes an Abolitionist.

Birney's efforts to extend the membership of this society resulted in his making a thorough study of the whole problem of slavery and he reached the conclusion that its immediate abolition would be less harmful to the slave states than the gradual emancipation which he had formerly favored. To set an example, he gave free papers to his six former slaves who had remained with him and worked for wages. He also resigned his connection with the colonization society and became an out-and-out abolitionist.

During the next few years Birney devoted his time to the anti-slavery cause and traveled about the country making speeches for it. In 1835 he made the principal address at the meeting of the American Anti-Slavery society and laid down the rules for the abolitionists to observe in carrying on their work. Next he announced his intention of returning to Danville and establishing an abolitionist newspaper, the Philanthropist. But when he arrived in his native state, he found himself regarded as a renegade and the persecutions of his neighbors and officials forced him to move to Cincinnati where he promised to keep up his agitation against slavery until it was destroyed.

The mayor of Cincinnati warned him that the city authorities could not promise to protect him if he persisted in his intention of publishing an anti-slavery paper in a city just across the river from the slave state of Kentucky. Despite this warning, Birney issued the first number of the Philanthropist and immediately discovered that the mayor's warning had not been an idle one. For the pro-slavery men started a campaign of persecution against him until finally a mob formed to destroy his property and tar and feather him. Instead of fleeing, Birney boldly faced the mob and made such a stirring plea for the principle of freedom of the press and freedom of speech that the mob was dissuaded from its purpose.

In 1837 Birney moved to New York to become secretary of the National Anti-Slavery society and as such was its guiding genius. Within two years he had organized 644 auxiliary societies in addition to the 1,009 which had been in existence when he became secretary of the national society. In one year he issued more than 725,000 copies of the society's publications, all spreading the gospel of abolition.

As a part of his work Birney visited every state legislature in the North to secure the passage of resolutions against the extension of slavery or to gain the right of trial by jury for those charged with breaking the slavery laws. In 1839 ex-President John Quincy Adams, who was then serving in congress, declared in favor of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia and Birney, seeing in this measure an entering wedge for a national abolition law actively campaigned for the election of congressmen pledged to vote for the Adams proposal.

A New Party Is Formed.

As the presidential campaign of 1840 approached and it became evident that neither the Whigs nor the Democrats would take any decisive stand on the slavery question, Birney decided that the time had come to put an anti-slavery presidential candidate in the field. Accordingly he called for a convention to be held in Albany, N. Y., in April, 1840. Delegates from six states met there and their unanimous choice for the nominee of the new Liberty party was Birney. As mentioned earlier in this article, he ran a poor third in the race with Harrison and Van Buren, polling only 7,059 popular votes and failing to get a single one in the electoral college.

Despite the poor showing made by this party in the "Log Cabin-Hard Cider" campaign which sent Harrison to the White House, Birney was not discouraged. He kept the party alive and four years later he was again its nominee for President. This time he polled 62,300 popular votes (nearly nine times the number he had received in 1840) but again failed to get a single electoral vote.

As a matter of fact he would probably have received more than 100,000 votes had it not been for the "Garland Forgery," a faked document purporting to be Birney's formal withdrawal from the race and his advice to the anti-slavery voters to support Henry Clay. After this campaign, which resulted in the election of James K. Polk, Birney withdrew from further national political activity. But the seed which he had sown had fallen on fertile ground.

In the campaign of 1848 the banner which Birney had first lifted was carried on by the Free Soil party with ex-President Martin Van Buren as the candidate for President and Charles Francis Adams, son of ex-President John Quincy Adams, for vice president. Campaigning on a platform which called for "Free Soil, Free Speech, Free Labor and Free Men" this ticket, even though it received only 291,000 votes, was sufficient to defeat Lewis Cass, the Democratic candidate, and elect Gen. Zachary Taylor, the Whig, thereby stimulating the anti-slavery forces throughout the country to renewed activity.

John C. Fremont

In 1852 the Free Soil party was again in the race with Sen. John P. Hale of New Hampshire as its candidate. He had quit the party over the slavery issue. Although the Free Soilers' vote dropped from 291,000 to 157,000 the issue which they had kept alive would not down. The "irrepressible conflict" with slavery was on. Four years later, by welding together all of the anti-slavery men—Free Soilers, Old Line Whigs and Know Nothings—into a new party, the Republican, the victory which Birney had foreseen was nearly in sight. For Gen. John C. Fremont, the Republican candidate, polled more than 1,000,000 votes and began sounding the death knell of slavery.

Birney did not live to see the final note sounded. He died near Perth Amboy, N. J., on November 25, 1857. Three years and three weeks later the Republican party triumphed over the divided Democratic party and sent its candidate, Abraham Lincoln, to Washington. In a little more than a month after he took the oath of office the guns in Charleston harbor heralded the opening of a conflict in whose fires slavery in the United States was destroyed forever.

RAY MILLAND would like to keep a controlling hand on the scripts of all pictures in which he appears from now on. Truth came far too close to fiction to suit him a while ago, and he hasn't quite recovered yet.

He'd finished work in "Untamed" and gone to Sun Valley for a week's rest. Mrs. Milland stayed in Hollywood, as they were expecting the arrival of their first child some weeks later. Then he received word that he'd have to race the stork if he wanted to be in Hollywood when it appeared. He started for Boise, Idaho, in a car, also in a blizzard. At Boise he chartered the only plane available, and was grounded at Salt Lake City. He telephoned the hospital, in Hollywood, and learned that he had a son.

In "Untamed" he'd braved a blizzard to reach the bedside of a sick sweetheart. If it's all the same to the scenario writers, he'd rather have less harrowing experiences.

Hollywood's most famous mixed foursome—Paulette Goddard, Ruby Keeler, Bing Crosby and Bob Hope—will probably have difficulty in sticking to picture-making if they all find themselves in the cast of "Follow Through." They played together in a charity match last autumn, and it was then that the idea of teaming them in a picture was suggested. They're all experts, and if they can resist staging a match that the script doesn't call for they'll be doing well.

Announcer Del Sharbutt intended to be a musician, but instead has become widely known as announcer for such programs as "Myrt and Marge," "Ask-It-Basket" and Lanny Ross'. The musician in him has come out at last, though; he's written two songs of Hit Parade proportions within a few weeks—"The Kitten With the Big Green Eyes," and "I'd Love To."

Ginger Rogers, who has millions of fans now, had only one in 1929; he was John L. Cass, who recorded the sound of "Primrose Path," in which she co-stars with Joel McCrea. About 10 years ago RCA made a two-reeler called "Campus Sweethearts," in New York, to try out a new wide-film process. Two movie unknowns, Ginger Rogers and Rudy Vallee, were featured.

The director didn't care for the song that Ginger had been rehearsing, but Cass insisted on recording it. "She had everything, including a swell mike voice," he says. "I knew she was star dust—and how!"

Want to see what happens to winners of beauty contests? Claire James, who was runner-up in the Miss America contest last year, is playing a bit in Paramount's "The Ghost Breakers"; she appears in a restaurant scene, wearing a floor-length dinner dress.

Ben Bernie and his lads and lassies, including Dinah Shore and Lew Lehr, are moving. After 60 weeks of Sunday broadcasts they're setting up shop in a Wednesday evening half-hour, beginning April 10. Cecil B. DeMille is back in character again. Now that he is directing "The Northwest Mounted Police" and goes straight from the movie studio to the radio one where he does his Radio Theater broadcasts, he shows up in his "shooting" outfit—high boots, riding breeches, and headgear ranging from sombrero to pith helmet.

If you have a harpsichord that you don't want, get in touch with Alec Templeton. Collecting unusual musical instruments is his hobby, and he has no harpsichord and he wants one. There are only 10 of these ancient instruments in the United States, four of them owned by friends of Templeton's in Chicago. They urged him to try one not long ago, he played his favorite satire, "Bach Goes to Town"—and now his life won't be perfect until he is presented with a harpsichord of his own.

Pretty Frocks for Your Lamp Shades

A CHANGE of lamp shades gives any room a lift, and here is a smart, new transformation trick. You start with a plain parchment paper or bristol board shade, preferably white; then you make a full skirt of some exciting fabric to cover it. By sewing snaps inside and also to the top of the shade, it is easy to remove these for laundering or cleaning.

Taffeta, lawn, net, organdy, swiss, gingham—all are used and the imagination runs riot in trimmings. Frills or double ruchings at the top and bottom are favorites. Edges are pinked or machine stitched in heavy contrasting thread. Contrasting shirring holds the fullness at the top; and color is added by means of fancy braids, ribbons or bias tape, according to type. Sewing Book 1 and 4, contain directions for making a foundation frame, or you may use a shade that you have.

SAUCE MUST COMPLEMENT THE FOOD
(See Recipes Below)

'Sauce for the Goose'

The function of a sauce may be either to accent or to soften a flavor; it may be used to enrich a food, or to moisten it; the sauce may be sweet or savory; it may be hot or cold. Whatever its purpose or classification, the sauce must be smooth in flavor as well as smooth in consistency. It should, in addition, offer contrast in color, flavor, in texture, or in temperature.

Sauces are "sweet" or "savory," depending upon whether they are used for desserts, or are served with meat, vegetables, egg dishes or macaroni.

French cooks, to whom sauces are sacred, use two basic recipes or "mother sauces" from which all their savory sauces are developed; no simple white sauce or sauce merely thickened with browned flour, for them!

To serve its purpose, a sauce must complement the food—rather than disguising it. That means subtle seasoning, and just the right consistency.

Plain white sauce—the standby of so many cooks—should seldom be served "as is." It's a foundation, really, which is quite likely to be flat in flavor, and very much too thick! Judiciously seasoned, it can be used in dozens of different ways. Flavor it with sharp, grated cheese, or add condensed tomato soup to it, for character; use a drop or two of Worcestershire or a half teaspoon of prepared mustard; or—and this is a secret we might well borrow from our French cousins—substitute soup stock for part of the milk, in making the sauce.

Orange Sauce.

¼ cup sugar
1½ tablespoons cornstarch
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup boiling water
¼ cup orange juice
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ teaspoon orange rind
1 tablespoon butter

Mix sugar, cornstarch and salt. Add boiling water slowly to this dry mixture, stirring constantly. Place in saucepan and cook over low flame until mixture is clear. Remove from fire and add orange juice, lemon juice, orange rind and butter.

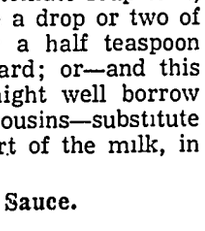
Delicious Sauce.

½ cup heavy cream (whipped)
1 egg
¼ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon vanilla extract

Beat white and yolk of egg separately. Add sugar to beaten yolk, then add beaten egg white. Last of all add whipped cream and vanilla extract. Serve at once.

Italian Tomato Sauce.

Into a deep frying pan place a No. 2½ can of tomatoes, 1 green pepper chopped fine, 1 large onion chopped fine, ½ lb. ground round steak, 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon tabasco sauce, ¼ teaspoon ground allspice, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon black pepper, 2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese and 2 cups water. Cook slowly for approximately 2 hours. Cover cooked spaghetti with sauce and sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese.



Easy-to-Make Hollandaise Sauce.

Into top of double boiler place the juice of 1 lemon, 4 egg yolks, ½ cup butter and a dash of paprika. Beat constantly over boiling water until thick.

Barbecue Sauce.

1 large onion
1 clove garlic
½ cup catsup
½ cup Worcestershire sauce
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon sugar
½ cup vinegar
Red pepper, black pepper, salt and mustard—to taste

Cut the onion and garlic into fine pieces. Strain the tomatoes and add one can of water. Add the other ingredients and bring to a boil. Serve over any meat. This is also good for any fowl or game.

Cheese Souffle With Tomato Cream Sauce.

3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
1¼ cups milk
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon dry mustard
½ pound sharp cheese
4 eggs

Melt the butter in a saucepan, add the flour and cook until frothy. Then add the milk and cook together until the sauce has thickened. Measure out ½ cup of cream sauce and set aside to use in the sauce. To the remaining cream sauce in the pan add salt, dry mustard and cheese and heat until the cheese is melted. Add beaten egg yolks. Cool. Beat egg whites until stiff and fold into mixture. Pour into a casserole (about 8 inches in diameter) and bake 1 hour to 1 hour and 15 minutes in a very moderate (310-degree) oven. Serve at once and put a spoonful of tomato cream sauce over each portion.

Tomato Cream Sauce.

1 can condensed tomato soup
½ cup cream sauce (saved from first part of recipe)

Combine the tomato soup and sauce and heat, but do not boil.

Hot Butterscotch Sauce.

2 cups light brown sugar
½ cup coffee cream
¼ cup light corn syrup
¼ teaspoon salt

Blend all the above ingredients and place in saucepan. Cook slowly, stirring at frequent intervals, until mixture reaches the soft ball stage (236 degrees). Serve very hot over ice cream.

'Busy-Day Meals.'

Are there busy days in your household, when there's very little time for preparing and serving meals? If there are, you'll be interested in what Eleanor Howe has to tell you about "Busy-Day Meals." Watch for her column next week—and for the menus and tested recipes you'll find in it.

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

'Magic' Butter Rolls

Speaking of "busy-day" meals, here's a recipe that will make one and one-half dozen "magic" butter rolls in a hurry. This is what you need:

3 cups general purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup butter or other shortening
¼ cup evaporated milk
¼ cup water
2 cakes yeast
1 tablespoon sugar
3 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
½ cup sugar
1 cup nuts (cut fine)

To 1½ cups flour add salt and shortening, combining as for pie crust. Combine milk and hot water. When lukewarm add the yeast and 1 tablespoon sugar, blend well and then stir into the first mixture, beating until very smooth. Cover and let stand 20 minutes. Then add the eggs and beat vigorously. Beat in the vanilla and remaining 1½ cups flour. Stir until smooth. The dough will be stiff but slightly sticky. Tie the dough loosely in a square of cheesecloth and drop it into a pail of cool water (70 to 80 degrees). In about an hour the dough will rise to the top of the water. When it does, remove it from the pail. Knead lightly. Cut into small pieces, roll in sugar and chopped nuts. Twist pieces as desired and let stand for 5 minutes. Bake in hot oven about 20 minutes.

Employment Facts Are Being Obtained In Current Census

(Because the once-in-ten-year census is the government activity that comes most directly home to each of the 132,000,000 of us, the census bureau here explains the vital inquiries being made. This article discusses the unemployment phase of the nation in relation to the census.)

ON THE theory that the greatest problem of the nation is to get its idle people back to work, the present census is bearing down hard on information that will help to that end.

The nature of censuses always have been determined largely by the needs of the times. King David, in biblical times, counted his people and was glad to find that he had 1,300,000 men capable of wielding the sword. William the Conqueror, with an eye to levying taxes, in 1086 listed landed proprietors in his Doomsday Book. When George Washington was President, the first census of free whites was taken, that representation in congress might properly be determined according to the actual population of the nation at that time.

Each decade the census bureau has added studies as need for information seemed imperative. Under President Monroe it was thought advisable to count the slaves. Jackson listed the aliens, Van Buren the pensioners of the Revolutionary war, Zachary Taylor valued the real estate, Buchanan recorded occupations, Grant the value of real and personal estates, Benjamin Harrison mortgages, McKinley time lost from work, Herbert Hoover the possession of radio sets.

Problems Now Are Economic.

This year the most baffling problems have been economic. The census has wanted to know much about housing; first, because it gave a measure of the manner in which the people live and, secondly, because a revival of building might bring a return of prosperity. It has multiplied its questions on unemployment because getting its people to work is still its number one problem at the present time.

An examination of old census figures shows that, in 1870, 75 per cent of gainful workers were in agriculture and manufacturing. More recent figures show but 50 per cent so employed. This is due chiefly to the development of machines. But it presents the stern fact to be faced, of 12,000,000 jobs that are permanently gone.

In 1910 there were 6,200,000 laborers on American farms. In 1930, despite the increase in the population, there were but 4,400,000, a loss of 1,800,000 jobs, representing permanent unemployment that has come to a single industry. Census figures should aid in the solution of these problems.

The census bureau is authorized by law to prepare the questions that are to be asked. It confers with other governmental agencies. It calls in conference representatives of industry, labor, and other interested groups. It invites suggestions. Its drafts of questions finally go before a census advisory committee made up of experts from various private statistical agencies. But in the end, the census bureau is required under the law to prepare the questions. It does the required job as best it can.

Some People Dislike Questions.

Some people consider some of these questions too intimate. They take exception to questions as to their mortgages, bathrooms, earnings. Despite the fact that the names will be stripped immediately from these facts, that they will be used only for statistical purposes, that the enumerator who records them is sworn to secrecy, that he may be sent to jail if he reveals anything that is told him, some people hesitate to answer. They insist on allowing their personal judgment and feelings in the matter to interfere with the sweeping purposes of their government.

The act lays emphasis on "inquiries relating to unemployment." The work done and money taken in by the 50,000,000 workers of the nation not only measures their status but the purchasing power so vital to industry. The theory is that the flow of wages and salaries is the economic blood pressure of the nation and the degree to which this blood is above or below normal cannot be known without measuring it. The nation, the census bureau holds, has never yet had a complete picture of the extent and effect of unemployment and under-employment. Its questions this year have been framed with the object in view of supplying that need. When the returns are in and the figures digested, that precious array of facts, which is essential to a wise procedure in working out baffling problems, is expected to be much more formidable than it ever has been before this time.

Bringing Home the Bacon

It takes the average American worker about 18 minutes to earn enough to buy a pound of bacon; an Englishman, 45 minutes; a German, 89 minutes, and a Belgian, 156 minutes.

Carbon Dioxide Compensation

To compensate for the three pounds of carbon dioxide exhaled daily by the average human being, and restore the consumed oxygen to the air, three large trees are required.

HOSEA TELLS OF GOD'S FORGIVING LOVE

LESSON TEXT—Hosea 6:1-7; 14:4-9.
GOLDEN TEXT—If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—I John 1:9.

God loves sinners! This is the message of the Bible. God hates sin, but He loves sinners and is eager that they should repent and receive His forgiveness. God even loves the backslider, the one who has been in fellowship with Him, tasted the joys of the eternal promised land and then turned back to the fleshpots of the world. This is the special message of the book of Hosea, for he deals with a backsliding and rebellious Israel, so determined to turn against God's love that they are described in 11:7 (R. V.) as being "bent on backsliding."

Israel failed to heed God's warning, did not respond to His loving call, and went on to judgment. May none of us be so foolish and stubborn. God is now calling sinners in love and compassion, doing everything in His power to lead them to repentance and spiritual healing. "Today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts"(Ps. 95:7, 8).

I. God Calling Sinners (6:1, 2).

The great loving heart of God longs after wayward men. Though they have in deliberate unbelief turned from Him, yet He sends His messenger to bring them His gracious invitation No more beautiful word can be spoken than "Come." It speaks of an open door, of a forgiving spirit, of a desire for renewed fellowship.

Come, O sinner, and meet the Saviour. He it is who by both life and death has revealed the fullness of God's love to you. In Him you will find entrance into eternal life and joy. He says, "I am the door, by me if any man enter in he shall be saved" (John 10 9).

Observe also the word "return." The invitation from God is not only to those who have never known Him, but also to the backslider. How many miserably unhappy backslidden Christians there are in the world! Friend, if you are one of them, this invitation is especially for you!

II. God's Dealings With Sinners (6 3-7).

Our Lord is both compassionate and faithful in His dealings with sinners He will win them with love and tenderness if they permit Him to do so, but if necessary He can also use the rod of punishment or the storm of unpleasant circumstances to drive them to Him. Remember that both the tenderness and the severity of God are expressions of His love.

With Israel God wanted to come as the gentle, reviving rain from heaven (v. 3), but because of their unrepentant attitude (v. 4) He had to come forth as One who hews down and destroys (v. 5). Even in thus breaking down and destroying He is only preparing to rebuild. As the surgeon must first hurt in order to heal, God must sometimes cut deeply in order to remove the blight of sin.

These lines will probably be read by many who have wondered at the dealings of God with them. Perhaps they have been inclined to condemn Him as being unkind or severe. Let them be assured that God is love and that back of all of His dealings with men there is His tender purpose to bring them unto Himself for salvation or for blessing.

III. God Healing Sinners (14:4-9).

When sinners come to Him with words of repentance (14:1) God is ready to meet them and to heal all of their sins and backslidings. Observe that not only will He heal their past sins, but will cause their present position to be such that He may "love them freely" (v. 4), and then their future will be one of great glory. God is infinitely gracious and pours out His love without measure upon the sinner who returns to Him.

Verses 5 to 8 give a beautiful picture of God's blessings on the life of the regenerated man. The lily (v. 5) speaks of stately royal beauty. Lebanon (v. 5) is strength and stability, even as the great cedars of Lebanon were treasured for their strength. The spreading branches (v. 6) tell of expansion and growth. The olive tree (v. 6), the corn and the vine (v. 7), all speak of fruitfulness and usefulness. The smell of Lebanon (v. 6) is the smell of cedar and bespeaks a life so fragrant that it spreads around it the "sweet savor of Christ" (II Cor. 2:15). The evergreen fir tree (v. 8) speaks of constant freshness and beauty.

God has all these things in mind for every Christian, that is, for every sinner who will repent and turn to Him through Christ, and for every backslider who will return to Him today.

For Poultry Drinking Water

A good, cheap and effective disinfectant to put in the drinking water of poultry is potassium permanganate, says W. R. Whitfield, extension poultryman at Iowa State College. He recommends using only enough of the chemical to turn the water a red wine color.

Since the AAA started in 1933, it has been responsible for from 4 to 14 per cent of the cash farm income for the United States, according to algricultural economists at Iowa State College.

NEW FIXTURES INSTALLED AT QUANDT'S CAFE THIS WEEK

Conrad Quandt is making a number of changes and improvements in his cafe this week. A new bar and back bar of modernistic design has been installed. New ice cream compartments are also on the list of new equipment to be installed.

To accomodate the new fixtures, a number of changes were made in the location of the show cases, etc. The entire arrangement is quite pleasing and convenient.

Mr. and Mrs. Quandt have also recently remodeled their apartment above the restaurant and have comfortable and attractive living quarters there.

Tragic.

As he backed his car out of his driveway, Merriell Smith, of Arlington, ran over and killed his 3 year old son, and badly injured his small daughter, who were coasting on the sidewalk.

CLUB HOGS HAVE A TOTAL VALUE OF $430,000

This Includes Market Pigs, Sows and Litters for Iowa in 1939

The value of hogs owned by farm boys and girls in Iowa 4-H club swine projects in 1939 was placed at "around $430,000" this week by J. S. Quist, assistant state club leader at Iowa State College. His estimate was based on reports submitted by counties of their 4-H pig club programs.

Market pigs, raised by 4-H club members, in litters or individual pig projects, were valued at $175,000 Every county in the state except one participated in the market pig program, in which more than 2,000 club members completed the work.

Feeding Improves

The number of completions exceeded nearly 400 the number in 1938.

In the purebred sow and litter classes, the total value of litters and breeding stock was estimated at nearly $252,000

Club boys did a better job of feeding last year, putting an average of nearly 1 4 pounds of gain per day on each market hog, compared with a little more than 1 2 pounds the year before The gains were cheaper, too But because of the heavy drop in hog prices, the club boys made less money than in 1938.

Litter Value Down

Although litters were smaller last year at farrowing time, the club boys raised more pigs per litter to market age In 1938 the average number of pigs per litter at the end of the project was a fraction above 6; last year it was nearly 7

But the average value of each litter at the end of the project was only $103, compared with $134 in 1938.

More than 1.400 club boys completed purebred sow and litter projects, including projects with single gilts, according to Quist.

Premiums won in the purebred classes totalled $10.277 and in the market classes, $8,734.

IOWA HAS JOB OF REBUILDING ITS ORCHARDS

Iowa farmers have a horticultural problem facing them in building back the production of fruit on their farms. declares H. E. Nichols, associate professor of horticulture at Iowa State College.

Most of the settlers in Iowa planted orchards. Nichols says, and farm orchard acreage in Iowa reached its peak in 1910. By 1930, this acreage had dropped to one-fourth of the 1910 high. The recent drouth years and the severe winter of 1936 took a heavy toll, and now only a small fraction of the original farm orchards remain.

Hunt Hardy Varieties

"This decease was due in part to the fact that varieties of apples grown in Iowa were not sufficiently winter hardy," Nichols says.

He points out that since 1870, horticulturists at Iowa State College have been working from all angles at the problem of developing winter hardy varieties for the state The efforts of the horticulturists have even included the introduction of some 300 varieties from Russia

Top-working is now helping to solve the problem of winter-hardy varieties. In top-working, a tree of known hardiness which is resistant to winter injury is used as a stock. Virginia Crab or Hibernal are the most common varieties used. On the main branches of the stock are grafted or budded the varieties desired.

Demonstration Orchards

"The Horticulture Extension Service has been carrying out a program aiding the farmers to establish hardy, top-worked orchards on their own farms," Nichols says

In as many townships as is practical in each county, the Extension Service gives a series of yearly demonstrations. The first year a demonstration is giving on planting fruit trees; the second year one is given on pruning and the third year, on budding and grafting. Future demonstrations are devoted to instruction on the care of orchards in protecting them from natural enemies and in stimulating them to more productive growth.

"At present 79 orchards have been planted in 19 counties as a result of these demonstrations," Nichols said. "Eighty more orchards are to be set out this spring, which will bring the total to 159 in 32 counties."

Seniors Will Present Class Play Friday Evening This Week

BIG HEARTED HERBERT WILL BE IN KLEMME THIS FRIDAY NIGHT

Annual Senior Class Play Will Be Given One Night Only

"Big Hearted Herbert," the play to be given Friday night by the Klemme High School seniors, is one of the best plays from the standpoint of authorship ever to be presented here. It was written by Anna Steese Richardson and had its world premiere on Broadway several years ago under the direction of Eddie Dowling. It has been among the top attractions of the stage ever since.

The play takes place in the home of Herbert Kalness, a self-made business man, who has just had a run-in with the income tax collectors. This circumstance puts him in a bad humor, which he manages to maintain to the end of the play He disagrees with the family at every turn and is especially hostile when they remove his father's picture and cuspidor from the living room.

Junior Kalness has his heart set on becoming an engineer, and Alice has secretly become engaged to Andrew Goodrich, a young lawyer Kalness fumes and storms at the society airs put on by his wife and family in entertaining young Goodrich's folks. Jim and Amy Lawrence are also at the dinner and encourage Junior to follow his engineering bent. Kalness finds evervone against him in his effort to uphold his own example as a plain self-made man, and he creates such a scene that all of the guests leave in disgust.

The next evening Herbert telephones his wife that he is bringing home Mr Havens, one of his best customers to dinner Mrs. Kalness decides to serve a dinner which will be the plainest of plain She coaches the family to act in accord with her scheme, and the result is . . . well, it's worth going to see, so be sure to see "BIG HEARTED HERBERT" neral Services Thursday at Klemme Reformed Church For Mr. Peter Josten

Funeral services for Peter Josten, 69, will be held at the Klemme Reformed Church Thursday afternoon, April 18th at 2:00 o'clock, with Rev. Calvin Grossheusch preaching the sermon.

Mr. Josten died at a Mason City hospital where he had been for a major operation. Mr. Josten apparently was making a good recovery and was ready to come home, when he became suddenly ill and died within a few hours.

Interment will be made on the family lot in the Klemme Cemetery and the casket bearers are Bert Auchampach, Wm. Greiman, Oscar Swanson, Fred Arnold, Herman Priebe and Fred Barz. The following Obituary is through the courtesy of the Wellemeyer Funeral Service:

Obituary

Peter Josten was born Dec. 9, 1870 at Flensburg, Schleswig Holstein, Germany, the fifth of a family of seven children born to his parents, Valentin and Anna Nissen Josten.

In May 1875, at the age of 4, he came to America with his parents, who settled on a farm near the center of Ell Township, here he completed his rural school education and was confirmed in the Ell Twp. Reformed Church. He was at one time organist in this church.

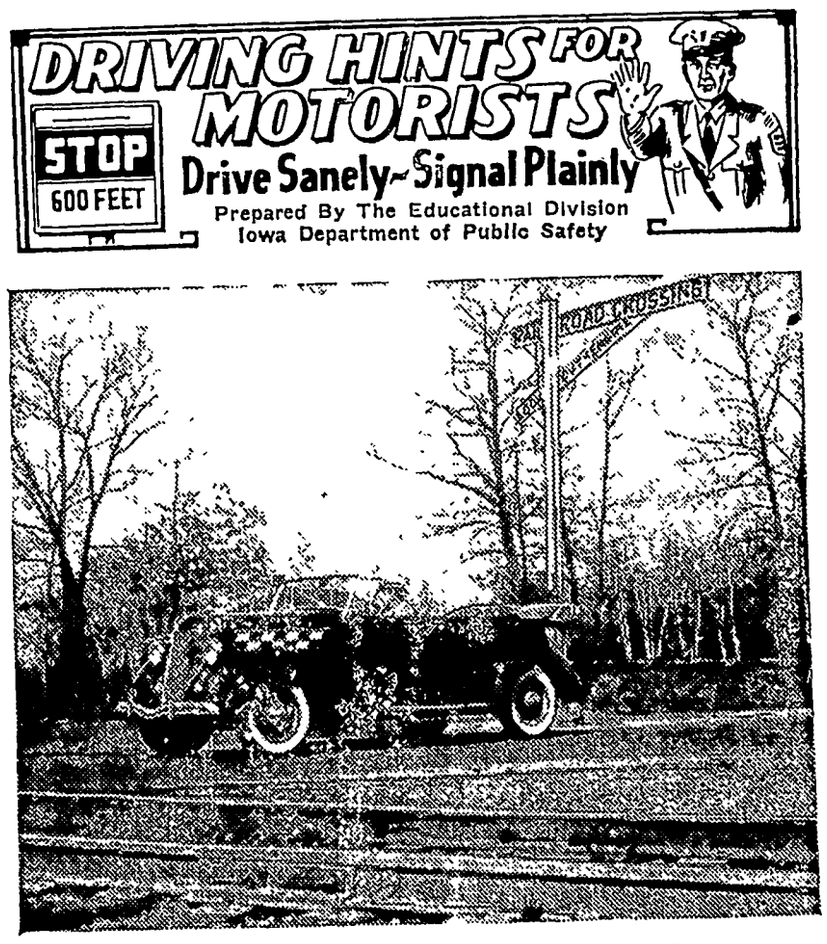
On Jan. 5, 1897, Peter Josten and Louise Becker were married and commenced housekeeping on the farm next south from the home place, where Alfred Josten now lives, 23 years later they built up a new farm house 2 miles east of Klemme, here they lived 18 years and in 1938, they retired to a new home in Klemme.

Peter Josten was a kindly man of good judgment hence his friends and neighbors honored him with various offices of trust. Namely he was a charter member of the Immanuel Reformed Church at Klemme in which he served at different times as Deacon, Elder and Sunday School Teacher. He was Secretary of the Klemme Creamery 8 years; Ell Twp Clerk for 30 years; Secretary of the Ell Twp. School Board for 25 years. He served on the Board of Directors of the First National Bank at Klemme, and the Farmer's Elevator at Garner.

Several weeks ago, Peter Josten became aware of a serious stomach ailment, he was recovering nicely from an operation at a Mason City hospital and was about ready to come home, when a thrombosis settled in his lung and ended his earthly career. He reached the age of 69 years, 4 months and 6 days.

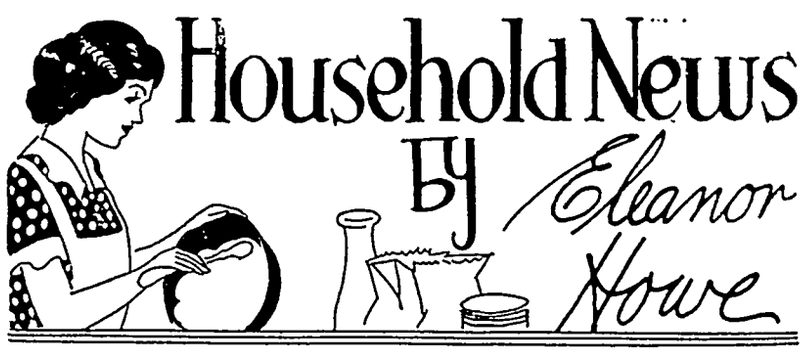
He leaves besides his wife: two sons, Alfred V. and Edmund K., both farming near Klemme; one grandson, Duane B. Josten; one sister, Mrs. Aug Haberkamp, Garner, Iowa; three brothers, Erich, John and Henry, all of Klemme, and many more distant relatives and friends.

We travel down a winding road
A road without an end,
And they who seem so far away
Are only 'round the bend,
They face a brighter sunshine,
Softer breezes, skies more blue,
And sometime in their happiness
They'll meet again with you.
Let not your heart be troubled
For it's true that in the end
Great joy will follow sorrow
When—you meet around the bend.



CROSS CROSSINGS CAUTIOUSLY

Stop! Look! Listen! That's the only safe rule when you come to a railroad crossing. Never try to beat a train to a crossing. Modern streamliners travel much faster than they appear to be moving. Look both ways, particularly on a country road where the vision is frequently obstructed. There's no more terrible accident than that of a car full of people smashed by a train.



LAMB CHOPS EN CASSEROLE MAKE A "BUSY-DAY DINNER"
(See Recipes Below)

Busy-Day Meals

There's something about the first warm, sunny days of spring that makes a woman don her working clothes, roll up her sleeves and get started on house cleaning.

In spite of all the work involved, spring cleaning does give your spirits a lift. And it's very apt to spur you on to such heights that unless you've planned your cleaning campaign with all the finesse of an army general, the end of house cleaning is likely to find you with a shining, immaculate house, but an exceedingly weary body and a very disturbed family! But with a definite plan of action to guide you, even your meals can be served on schedule, and they can be good meals; a simple meal with a hot main dish that can be partly prepared the day before, is one solution to the problem of how to keep your family well fed and happy even at house cleaning time.

Plan a meal that requires little watching, one that is easy to serve and one that won't be spoiled if it isn't eaten on the stroke of 12:00. Serve the meal "help-yourself-style," using paper plates and napkins, because these are the things that make hot meals practical even in the thick clean-up by flying brooms and dust mops.

You'll find worthwhile suggestions for busy-day meals, below.

Spanish Roll.

Round steak, 2½ inches thick
1 No. 2 can tomatoes
1 small can mushrooms
1 medium onion (cut fine)
1 green pepper (cut fine)
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
4 whole cloves
Dash of allspice
½ teaspoon salt
Noodles

Dredge steak with flour and sear on both sides. Place in casserole, and add tomatoes, mushrooms, onion, green peppers and seasoning. Cover and bake about 2½ hours in a slow oven (300 degrees). Half an hour before serving, boil some noodles in salted water. Drain Place steak on large platter, surround with noodles, and cover with the sauce.

Busy-Day Cake.
(Makes one 8-inch cake)

¼ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
½ cup milk

Cover the dish and bake in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees) about 1½ hours, or until the vegetables are tender.

¾ cup rice
1 cup sugar
1 quart milk
½ teaspoon salt

Wash rice and mix with 1 cup sugar, 1 quart milk and salt. Place in hot oven (425 degrees). Stir into pudding frequently the brown crust that forms. As it thickens pour in ½ cup milk. Bake for about 1½ hours and serve hot or cold.

GENERAL HUGH S. JOHNSON Says:

United Features WNU Service

PLANES FOR THE ALLIES

THE policy of the President to permit the allies to buy our most advanced type of military and naval planes is 100 per cent correct

A principal problem in our preparation for defense is productive capacity. Time is "of the essence in war. Napoleon used to say. "I may lose a battle but I will never lose a minute—and hence few wars." We have the best industrial plant in the world. But in our modern system of manufacture, the best plant in the world can't get into production without first going through a slow and complicated effort called "tooling-up."

This means the arrangement of buildings and machine tools to provide a continuous flow from one operation to another without backtracking or lost motion. It means the making of the working points of those tools to insure absolute uniformity in all the thousands of separate parts that go into the assembly of any such complex and wonderful thing as a modern war plane.

"Once the original tooling is done fewer . . . experts are needed."

The scarcity, due to the depression, of sufficiently skilled pattern and tool-makers is one of the great "bottle-necks" retarding production Once the original tooling is done fewer of those experts are needed

Everybody who is old enough will remember that preparation to build the radically different successor to the old Model T tin Lizzie, paralyzed the production of even the great Ford plants for the better part of two years It is believed in the motor industry that a single last minute change in arrangement and design cost the Ford company millions of dollars and months of time. When this great preparation work is done, increase in speed and reduction in cost are very great

To put the American airplane industry on this kind of mass production basis would give us something that hasn't existed and, under conservative plans for our own equipment, might never have been completely attained. But a billion dollars worth of allies business coupled with our own requirements on basic designs identical with our own, will do exactly that This result of giving the allies our most advanced designs is the most fortunate thing that could happen to us from the angle of our own defense

TAX ON MACHINES

Senator O'Mahoney's proposal to tax machines has had a panning from every editorial that I read—and I have to read a good many. One recurring note is that Joe hails from the great open spaces of Wyoming, which hints that he can't know anything about machinery. I happen to hail from the great open spaces of Oklahoma, but that isn't going to prevent me from horning in on this argument.

I can't recommend the senator's bill. In the first place, although I have studied it, I don't understand it. I have a dim idea that it taxes the producer who makes more than average use of machines and from the avails, (correct avails) subsidizes the producer who uses less than the average machine power and hence employs more man power.

I can't go for that. It is not taxing for revenue. It is using the power to tax as a power to punish one group and reward another in proportion to their degree of departure from or compliance with a government rule as to how they should run their business If is both "punitive" and "incentive" taxation and both are dangerous ground.

Furthermore, it would be utterly impossible to apply. The labor-wage-element in the cost of various products varies from 10 per cent to 90 per cent and is largely caused by forces entirely beyond the producer's power to control.

Nevertheless, there is something very valuable in part of what the senator has at the back of his thought. We ought to re-examine this idea of financing all social legislation by taxes on payrolls or give more thought to taxes on machines or machine hours.

The rush toward machine production and away from employment isn't altogether caused by advances in science and invention Every time a manufacturer installs a new machine operation displacing labor, he makes a certain logical calculation

FARLEY PLANS A SHOW-DOWN

WASHINGTON.—It is no longer any secret that Jim Farley is definitely lined up with the anti-third termers But not generally known is the fact that Jim actually plans a show-down with Roosevelt regarding the President's own plans, and this show-down will come before the Democratic convention at Chicago.

Jim made up his mind to do this about the same time he issued his Massachusetts bombshell labeled, "My name will be presented to the national convention."

Democratic insiders had known for some time that Farley was cold to the idea of the President running again, but he sidestepped a positive commitment. He always declared that he was confident the President had no intention to seek re-election.

In the past month, with Roosevelt slates being entered in various states under obvious White House guidance, Farley's aloofness has hardened to out-and-out hostility. From being on the fence he has slid over definitely to the anti-third term group

Not only will Jim aggressively fight a third term, but he is prepared to denounce it publicly. However, he will not talk out until he has had a showdown with Roosevelt, at which time he will insist on a categoric "yes" or "no" answer

If there is no reply, or an unsatisfactory one, then Jim is prepared to express his opposition publicly He is aware that such a statement would play into the hands of the G. O P and that it may mean finale for him politically, but he feels that he owes it to the Democratic party and the country frankly to state his views.

The Massachusetts statement was Farley's opening gun in his plan to smoke out Roosevelt From now on, regardless of their close ties and their still warm personal friendship (as far as Farley is concerned), they are two rival candidates.

Note—Farley was absolutely sincere when he declared that he was "in no combination with anyone." Recent reports that he was secretly allied with Garner are unfounded. Privately Jim thinks Garner is getting nowhere fast His own personal ticket is Hull and Farley.

Borah Statue.

The state of Idaho plans to enshrine the memory of its late great Sen William E. Borah under the lofty dome of the national Capitol, where he served for more than 30 years

The state will fill its quota of statues in Statuary hall (the original chamber of the house of representatives, where each state is allowed to place two statues). The sculptor has not yet been chosen.

Borah will be the second senator elected by Idaho for this honor. Its other statue is that of Sen. George L. Shoup, a pioneer who was the first governor of Idaho when the territory was admitted to statehood in July, 1890. The Shoup statue is the tallest in Statuary hall, standing 13 feet.

Note—Mrs. Borah, accompanied by one of her sisters, soon will sail for Hawaii for a rest. Her plans after returning are indefinite.

Farm-Diplomat Wallace.

Following publication of a poll showing increased farm support for Henry Wallace, a newsman asked him. "Does this have any effect on your personal political ambitions, Mr. Secretary?"

Wallace evaded: "I noticed the poll indicated Pennsylvania was 51 per cent Republican."

"Mr. Secretary," persisted the newsman, "did you hear my question?"

"No," said Wallace, grinning. Then he added, "I'm trying to give you something of real interest."

ELMER SOUNDS A CALL

"I don't know no more than nobody else who will be the candidates for President this winter," declared Elmer Twitchell today, "but I would personally go for a sourpuss."

"A sourpuss?" the reporter asked, a little puzzled.

"Yes, sir," snapped Elmer, "a sourpuss. A deadpan candidate without a smile in his system. A fellow who can't photograph or screen well and who knows it. I am fed up with the old personality stuff in all public offices, and what is more I think a candidate with a severe mug and a what's-there-to-grin-over attitude might sweep the country."

"You don't mean that, Elmer," the reporter argued. "Everybody likes a radiant personality; everybody reacts to charm."

"Yeah," admitted Elmer, "and I'm for it, too, up to a point. But I think the personality theme has reached the point where the public is ripe for a swing the other way. This may be a sourpuss year."

Mr. Twitchell seemed quite serious about it.

"I like a genial, warm personality as well as the next man," he continued. "I am a sucker for charm, like the rest of the American public. Ordinarily I will vote for a man who screens well over a candidate who has nothing but efficiency to recommend him. Nine times out of ten I will go for the candidate with an appealing radio voice over the fellow for whom nothing can be said except that he would make a good President. But I now want a sourpuss. And for once I can be stampeded by a candidate whose voice on the air sounds like somebody filing a saw."

"It's a very strange argument you are making, Mr. Twitchell," the reporter put in "A smile and a radio voice are generally considered important assets in any campaign."

"That's what you think," barked Elmer. "I think there's a reaction. And it gives me a pain in the blouse to observe all the candidates on all sides grinning from ear to ear, trying to look like personality - plus boys on the screen and trying to register as the Voice of the Year on the radio. I tell you that if I was a candidate for public office today I would have my picture taken only when I looked like I was having an argument with a taxicab driver, and I would open all my radio speeches with, 'Well, folks, I am a punk on the radio; I don't intend to bother acquiring a technique. All I expect to do is to quote facts and figures in a dull voice.' This alone would make me a sensation."

"You wouldn't get to first base as a candidate for inspector of manhole covers," the reporter insisted.

"Maybe not," said Elmer, "but I still think otherwise. And I hope I am right, because no country can stand government by personality and microphone charm indefinitely. Ultimately a sourpuss is necessary medicine. In fact, I am busy on the idea. I have already started organizing the Sourpuss for President Clubs. No candidate with charm can even get close to us."

ment stores—closer than ever to the farm.

However, it is pointed out, such threats to farm bank balances are more than offset by technological advances which have cut farm production costs. Chief among these are small low-cost, all-purpose tractors which owe much of their time and fuel savings ability to the pneumatic rubber farm tires on which they have attained speeds comparable to those of the automobile. Designed specifically for work on the typical American farm of 100 acres or less, these rubber-shod machines have been found to cost a maximum of 34 cents an hour to operate on regular farm work, including depreciation, upkeep, interest, taxes and all other charges.

Replaces the Horse.

With government figures placing the cost of working one horse or mule at 15.4 cents an hour, the small rubber-equipped machines replace four draft animals which would cost a total of 61.6 an hour to work. Each hour, then, the tractor is saving at east 27.6 cents or $2.76 every 10-hour day, a sizeable addition to farm savings. Furthermore, P. W. Stansfield, farm service manager of the B. F. Goodrich company which pioneered the development of pneumatic farm tires, points out that the saving of approximately 24 working days on a 150-acre farm by the faster machines enables farmers to cultivate approximately 33 additional acres with resultant increases in income up to $600 annually. Thus, it is presumed that farm thriftiness, despite rising prices, will increase during the next few years.

Statistics on the cash income of farm families are peculiarly relevant to modern American problems. In New England, average net cash income for the group of farm operators' families studied was $789. In the central region, the average net cash income for the families studied extended from a low of $518 in Iowa to $1,202 in Illinois. Dust and drouth disasters are reflected still in figures for the mountain and plains regions where the lowest net cash income was $207 for families studied in North Dakota. The high was $874 in Colorado, Montana, and South Dakota.

New Englanders Need More.

In the Southeast, white farm families in Georgia fared worst with an average net cash income of $449 for the year. Mississippi white farm operators fared best with an average net cash income of $1,566.

Many oddities were brought out in the survey. Despite their traditional thrift, New England villagers required an income of from $1,750 to $2,000 before substantial savings were made. The expenditures of low-income Southern farm wives and daughters for cosmetics and beauty parlors almost equalled those of the Pacific coast group where net cash incomes were highest. In Ohio and Pennsylvania, the farmer spent more on clothing per year than his wife, while in the Midwest men spent more in barber shops than their wives did in beauty parlors.

o make it even more unusual, arge number of the Canadian ps sent abroad or held for train- ing are American volunteers, of whom between 10,000 and 15,000 are said to have crossed the border since war began.

Unlike 1914, when hostilities brought feverish recruiting of men for cannon fodder and women for nursing and bandage-making, the war of 1940 finds Canada going along much as usual. Only a few select troops are accepted and they must pass rigid examinations. Women, no longer needed for bandage-wrapping and sock-knitting, are concentrating instead on saving food and working in offices and factories.

Nor is Great Britain demanding huge quantities of foodstuffs as in 1914. Canadian farmers, who expected such a rush, are left with bulging granaries.

As a source of war supplies and a training ground for allied aviation Canada is rapidly becoming so important that many believe it may be the British empire's most important industrial center when the war is over. Some 15,000 pilots from England, Australia, New Zealand and other parts of the empire are being given their final training in Canada.

The dominion is also manufacturing planes, shells and automobiles. Battleships may also be built there eventually, for Canada is now making smaller naval vessels.

As never before, Canada at war is emphasizing her financial independence from England, acting almost as a separate nation. Canadian securities held in England are being repatriated and $1,500,000,000 worth of Canadian-held American securities are being sold back to the United States.

The dominion is financing all munitions manufacturing herself, granting credits to Britain and earmarking her gold for Britain. When peace finally comes she will not only be independent of London but may actually be a creditor nation.

U. S. Watches Azores As Possible Threat To Atlantic Security

NEW YORK.—Direct flight of commercial airplanes between New York and the Azores islands, a distance of 2,000 miles, has again focused attention on the Azores as a potential aerial threat to American security.

Beginning this spring, two American transatlantic air services are making the 2,000-mile trip in a single hop, carrying mail and passengers. Military men see no reason why invading bombers could not make the same trip.

Thus the dreamy Portuguese islands in mid-Atlantic have assumed tremendous significance within a few short months, after 500 years of isolation and loneliness. They have moved within 15 hours of the Atlantic seaboard.

The islands have belonged to the Portuguese since their discovery in 1444. The United States holds no fear of invasion from the Azores so long as Portugal owns them, for the friendly relation of these two nations has continued unbroken since Colonial times. But it is not implausible to assume that an aggressor power may some day seize them.

Several military men have expressed this fear openly. In 1938, Rear Adm. Yates Stirling, former navy chief of staff, expected Franco Spain to capture Portugal.

THERE'S been a bit of knife-throwing going on in Hollywood, and it's been none too good for the nerves of the spectators who are scheduled to act as targets. Paulette Goddard is trying her hand at it, in preparation for her role in Cecil B. DeMille's "North West Mounted Police." She is scheduled to play "Louvette," whom Mr. DeMille described as "a combination of Circe, Desdemona, Carmen and a black panther." She always gets her man, and knife-throwing is part of her menace

So she's been practicing around the studio. "It's hard work," she complained the other day. "I'm afraid I'll knock off a finger or chop off a toe before I'm through."

"Probably my toe," gloomily prophesied Bob Hope, who's working with her in "The Ghost Breakers."

And over at Warner Brothers' Steve Clemento is also hurling knives, in a corner of the set for "Torrid Zone." An expert, he easily flips a knife into a wall 15 paces away.

James Cagney and Pat O'Brien, stopping to watch him, noticed that there were two chalk marks on the wall, less than six inches apart, and that the knife went whistling neatly between them.

"What do those marks mean?" asked O'Brien.

"Those," answered Clemento, "represent your head and Mr. Cagney's. They'll be that close together when I throw a knife between them for the picture."

Bette Davis owns her own home at last. She's been m Hollywood for nine years, and lived in a different home each year—she's never owned a house, a ranch or even a vacant lot. But before beginning "All This and Heaven Too" she bought what the salesman called "An American farm house"; she says it reminds her of her childhood home in New England. It's just five minutes from the studio. It's also just a little too near the Los Angeles river, which overflowed its banks a few years ago, washing away several homes in the vicinity.

Martha Scott and William Holden, two of the stars in Sol Lesser's "Our Town," consumed 32 strawberry ice cream sodas during the making of the love scenes for the picture, and at the moment wouldn't care if they never saw another one. But Frank Craven, who finished 10 cans of tobacco in his pipe during his scenes, just went out and bought more for his personal use.

There's an entire Hollywood novel in a press announcement that was sent out a while ago, before Linda Darnell started east. "Miss Darnell will be accompanied to New York by her mother, Mrs. Margaret Darnell," it stated, "but her father, who is a clerk in the Dallas post office, will remain on the job back in Texas." Apparently even the fame of his very beautiful daughter doesn't dazzle Mr. Darnell.

Priscilla and Rosemary Lane received a substantial offer to become platinum blondes—and turned it down! A representative of more than 5,000 hairdressers made it; he said that a scheme is being promoted to revive the platinum blonde craze introduced by the late Jean Harlow, and that several other stars are being approached with the same offer. It includes a royalty in addition to the flat advance sum.

Recently the students of Blue Ridge college, New Windsor, Md., selected Albert Dekker as the "Perfect Profile of 1940." Dekker won a narrow victory over Nelson Eddy; the girls selected him because his was the profile that impressed them most when they inspected the photographs of the contestants, which included every male star in Hollywood. What they didn't know was the man they chose as appears in his current picture, "Dr Cyclops," with his head shaved and his nose obscured by a pair of glasses.

MICAH'S VISION OF PEACE

LESSON TEXT—Micah 4:1-5; 5:2-5a.
GOLDEN TEXT—And they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Micah 4:3.

Peace on earth! Why, that is hardly more than a phrase which we recall at Christmastime as we think of the song of the angels. Yet now is the time to assure people that there will be peace on earth. Peacemakers who are now silent were striving to bring ,in a man-made peace, following a will-o'-the-wisp. Let us tell men about the real peace which will come when the Prince of Peace sets up His kingdom. Let us urge upon them the glad acceptance of His personal kingship in their hearts that they may even now know peace within.

Micah warned Judah that their rejection of God and His love would bring them sorrow and judgment. In the midst of his message, however, he breaks forth into a glowing prophecy of the glory that is to come during the reign of the Messiah, the Prince of Peace.

I. The Foundation of Peace—God's Word (4:1, 2).

Vainly do men labor to bring about a lasting peace built upon the words of men, for the moment there seems to be gain in repudiating promises given in the greatest of solemnity, they become mere scraps of paper. There is no security in such words, nor in the guns and battleships used to support or to break them.

God's Word, the teaching of His law, walking in His paths—here is the foundation for real peace. Micah speaks of the time "in the last days" when the people of the earth shall go up to God's house to hear His Word and to learn to walk in His ways. To that blessed and holy day we look forward with anticipation and joy even as we now bring men the message of Christ's redemption and His peace.

II. The Prince of Peace—Jesus Christ (4:3-5).

This beautiful portion of God's Word (and such parallel passages as Isa. 2:1-5; 11:1-12) gathers together the longing and hopes of peace-loving men of every age. Perfect justice, the end of all wars, prosperity for peaceful pursuits, boys no longer learning warfare, complete social security, universal worship of God—what a thrilling promise!

Will it ever come true? Yes. When? In the "latter days" (v. 1, R. V.). Who has made such a promise? God Himself. Who will bring it about? God's Son, the Prince of Peace, who will come to "judge between many people."

Why will men be so blind to the "sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place" (II Pet. 1:19)? Why will we reject Him who is "the day star" (II Pet. 1:19; Rev. 22:16) and who is even now ready to "arise in your hearts"?

III. His Coming—As Saviour (5: 2, 3).

This remarkable Messianic prophecy gave more than 700 years before the birth of Christ the exact place of His birth, so closely identified as to make both the prophecy and its fulfillment a testimony to the inspiration of the Bible. Note that this was the passage with which the priests and scribes answered the question of Herod (Matt 2:1, 4-6) regarding the place where the Messiah was to be born.

Thus the coming ruler of Israel, the Judge of all peoples, the Prince of Peace, is none other thah the Lord Jesus who was born into this world as the Babe of Bethlehem, "a Saviour . . . Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11). Israel rejected Him and He had to "give them up" (v. 3), but the time will come when they shall see Him as their King.

IV. His Reign—As King (5:4, 5a).

"This man shall be our peace" (v. 5, R. V.). He it is who "shall be great unto the ends of the earth" (v. 4); and that can be said of no man in all history except of Him of whom we sing,

Jesus shall reigh where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore
Till moons shall wax and wane no more
—Isaac Watts

His shall not be the reign of a despot, for we read that "He shall feed his flock in the strength of Jehovah" (v. 4, R. V.). His enemies and the enemies of God the Father must be put down. but His people will find Him to be the tender "good shepherd" who "giveth his life for the sheep" (John 10: 11). He is that now to every believer. Sinner, why not take Him now as your Saviour, your Good Shepherd, and join with His people in looking for His coming as King?

Here's an Easy Way To Do Smocking

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

A MOTHER writes: "I have enjoyed using the embroidery stitches in SEWING Book 2. I find a great deal of pleasure in handwork for the dresses of my little five-year-old, and am particularly interested in smocking."

Here is a trick that is useful for making honeycomb smocking in points without a special pattern. The fullness of any dress may be basted into tucks of graduated length, as at A. Even a little fullness in the center front or at the neckline may be smocked in one or two points. Always baste the center front tuck first and then work each way from it. The smocking starts at the left and is done with colored thread. Begin at the top of the second tuck. Catch it to the tuck at the left with three stitches. Work from the top down along each tuck as shown. The stitch at B is made by sliding the needle along inside the tuck.

Abe's Firstborn

A first child, a son, was born to tall Abe Lincoln and his small wife, Mary, and congratulations poured in on them. A friend met the proud father on the street one day and added his congratulations to the rest.

"Thanks," grinned Abe—then continued, "but I was scared."

"Why?" asked his friend in surprise. "Scared about what?"

"Well," Lincoln explained, "I was afraid it might have one leg like Mary's and one like mine!"

THE TRUTH SIMPLY TOLD

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of satisfactory use. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who test the value of Doan's under exacting laboratory conditions. These physicians, too, approve every word of advertising you read, the objective of which is only to recommend Doan's Pills as a good diuretic treatment for disorder of the kidney function and for relief of the pain and worry it causes.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warn of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!

Stalled.

As R. A. Spencer drove down the streets of Osage, he observed workmen cutting down a large tree. The woodcutters motioned for him to come on, and he did—not very promptly, however, as his engine stalled. The trunk of the tree crashed through the top of his car, missing his head by a few inches.

-oOo-

Disappears.

Carl Markin, bachelor farmer of near Clear Lake, is missing. Neighbors who went recently to his place found four calves and seven head of sheep dead in the barn, apparently of starvation. No evidence of foul play has been discovered.

oOo

Petticoat Government.

Some jokers at Morley put up names of a few local women in the city election there, as a joke like many jokes, this one backfired Ada Smith was elected mayor, Pearl Hunter, Kate Sunday and Lois Pulver, were named as councilmen, and Ruth Smith as assessor. Dwight Pulver, husband of one of the new officers, was the only old councilman to be elected, giving Morley probably the only husband-and-wife combination in the state on its city council.

oOo

Suit.

Because her tenant failed to pick 129 rows of corn, Mrs. Charles Lampright is suing him in district court in Kossuth County. She has also filed suit for $300 additional, alleging that had the tenant, Roman Eisenbacker, worked the farm properly, it would have increased the yield by at least 300 bushels.

-oOo-

Triple Visit.

The stork made a triple visit to an Iowa family of sisters last week. His first visit brought a baby girl to Mrs. Henry Herrig, of Schaller Then he went up to Odebolt and delivered a boy to Mrs. Herrig's sister, Mrs. John Buehlor and followed it up with a boy for their third sister, Mrs. Charles Neville, also of near Odebolt. His round trip to the sisters took less than 72 hour.

oOo

Postponed.

In Boone county district court attorneys picked a jury to try a case involving the state versus Charles Allen of Des Moines. The trial was postponed when some one happened to notice that no defendant was present.

oOo

No Teacher.

Miss Bertha Cadwell, Logan teacher whose pupils include the sons and daughters of many former pupils, has resigned there after 33 years in the public school system.

oOo

Efficiency.

Ten minutes after he heard a police broadcast from Storm Lake, chief of police Mulder of Sheldon, picked up a man who was wanted in LeMars for a traffic violation that he had just committed If this isn't speed, it will do until something faster comes along.

-oOo-

Long Time.

After 43 years of service Dr S. E. Blair of Alvord has retired. He received a loving cup and a reading lamp from his patients as a reward for his long service.

-oOo-

Double Winner.

In a contest held by the Iowa federation of women's clubs, Mrs. Robert Sinclair had the distinction of writing one of the two best songs and also one of the two best marches. Both of her selections will be entered in a national contest.

-oOo-

No One Hit.

There was no excuse for any one to get hit by a train at one of the Storm Lake railroad crossings one day last week. The new 'ding dong' warning signal ran wild. began to ring Tuesday afternoon and kept it up cotinuously until the next morning when an expert arrived to put it out of its misery.

-oOo-

Fire.

An old time prairie fire got out of control near Deep River one day last week. Fanned by a stiff breeze, it menaced half a dozen homes before being brought under control. Hastily dug trenches saved the dwellings.

-oOo-

Smith Brothers.

The Smith Brothers were to have a reunion last week, but not the same two gentlenen who look at each other from opposite ends of a box of cough drops. At Honolulu, Wayne and Glen Smith, Lake City youths, were scheduled for a visit. Wayne is in the U. S. Army and is stationed at Honolulu. Glen is in the navy and reached Honolulu on Uncle Sam's biggest aircraft carrier, the Saratoga.

Dug Potatoes.

J. M. Bennett of Glenwood did not plant any potatoes on "Good Friday", as is the custom, but he dug a few. His plow turned up a row of potatoes which had not been dug last fall and he turned out three bushels of excellent spuds in first class condition. They had not been frozen.

-oOo-

Two Mayors.

Parkersburg seems to have two mayors. When Mayor James Spain walked out in a huff, the city council called in O. B. Cook, defeated mayoralty candidate, and swore him in as mayor. Now the question has arisen, is Spain's oral resignation legal and binding? The code require that a mayor's resignation must be submitted to the council in writing. Neither does the statute provide for filling such a vacancy without a special election.

In Hancock county, the liquor store at Britt reported sales of $3,986 61 for March, and at Garner the store handed out packages of liquor that sold for $3,742.98, or a total for Hancock County of $7,729 59, an increase of $586.80 over February sales.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Klemme Reformed Church will meet next week, Wednesday, April 24th at the church parlors. Mrs. Stanley Thada and Mrs. Sumner Fuller are the hostesses.

Had Party

The Misses Stella and Elsie Thiemann entertained about twenty-five young people at a party at their home Sunday evening. Games were played after which a nice lunch was served.

During the next few months, farmers will increase their marketings of good, choice and prime beef steers—cattle that have been in the feedlot during the winter and spring. Since supplies of medium and common slaughter cattle are expected to decease, prices of these grades will hold steady or rise, narrowing the spread between upper and lower grades.

Hatching records for early spring show a marked decrease in number of eggs set, the number of chicks hatched and in advance orders for chicks. This, in addition to continued heavy cullings because of the unfavorable ration between poultry products prices and feed costs, indicates that farm flocks next fall will be considerable smaller than in 1939.

Fire ends the strange life of the "Witch of the Osarks." Hundreds beat a path to glimpse the future or to seek help from Old Jeanne Wallace who had an astonishing gift for solving other's problems but not her own. An unusual illustrated feature in The American Weekly, the magazine distributed with next Sunday's Chicago Herald-American.

New Telegraphic Device

Automatic telegraph, the latest advance in modern telegraphy, are ready for commercial use in Rockefeller Center office buildings, New York. Each customer is supplied with an automatic telegraph cabinet and key, which permits him to send his own telegrams. Telegrams for transmission by the automatic telegraph need only be typed or written in black ink or black pencil on a special sending form and dropped into a slot in the cabinet. An exact facsimile of the message is automatically received in the local telegraph office. Telegraph officials foresee the day when similar devices, with coin slots, will appear in many public locations such as drug stores, transit terminals and building lobbies.

Honduras Mahogany

English woodcutters in the Seventeenth century came from Jamaica to the mainland of Central America to get out "logwood," a valuable dye wood. They discovered that this region produced mahogany. Until the treaty of 1783 between England and Spain, the English were not supposed to cut mahogany in Honduras. However, the temptation was great and much of it was cut and the cutters were often in serious trouble with the Spaniards. The colony was twice wiped out and the survivors sold into slavery. According to Thomas Sheraton's book, "The Cabinet Directory," published in 1803, Honduras mahogany was the principal kind then being used in England.

Food for Children

As long as children are growing, they need more food in proportion to their size than grown-ups need. Children need the most food for their size when they are growing the fastest and when they are most active; that is, when they are babies and again when they are in their teens.

Some of the foods that grown-ups can eat are not suitable for children—highly seasoned foods and tea, coffee, and other drinks that contain caffein. Then, too, some of the foods that are good for all ages should be prepared differently for children and grown-ups. For example, for young children potatoes should be baked, boiled, or steamed, rather than fried.

Ink Spots And Spatters

UNHAPPY DAYS ARE HERE AGAIN . . . .

Those nice, warm spring days . . . boy they are grand . . . but look out fellows . . . the Missus will get you just when it's ideal for a round of golf or some gopher plinking with the twenty-two.

The days may be ideal . . . but unhappy days are ahead for we men . . . Spring means rake the yard, burn rubbish, lug out the household goods, beat carpets and rugs, take off the storm windows and put up the creens . . . it happens every year!

Why do the women have to clean house anyway? We have been trying to find the right answer for some twenty odd years . . . there's a nigger in the wood pile some place.

I-S-A-S

WE SAW A SPOT AND GOT OUR FOOT INTO IT . . . .

Why is it that we men can't leave well enough alone? The other day this scribe saw a spot on the ceiling. The spot got there when a local electrician installed a new electric fixture on the dining room ceiling.

The Scribe had a bright idea . . . a damp cloth would remove the spot. Friend wife watched the proceedings and now we remember she had a sort of wicked gleam in her eye as we went to work on the spot. When we got through the spot was ten times worse . . . it resembled a wrinkled mud-pie just around the fixture. "Ha, ha," she says, "now you can keep right on and wash ALL of the ceiling. I have been wanting to do that, so now you can just keep right on and clean the mess you started." Yep, we sure stuck our neck out too far that time!

Anyway, the ceiling DOES look nice now Phooey!

I-S-A-S

IRA DOESN'T WEAR HIS SHEEP SKIN ANY MORE . . .

Some of these cold, chilly and blustery "spring" days of the past couple of weeks, caught Ira Overholt without the protection of that big, warm sheepskin lined coat he has been wearing.

And back of that reason is a story . . . A few weeks ago when Ira Overholt was helping Jimmie Carlson move some machinery to Wisconsin, the Herman Stille truck was chartered for the trip. Among other accessories required for such a trip was the possible need for a heavy sheepskin coat . . . So Ira tossed his coat into the truck.

All went well . . . the machinery had been delivered to the Carlson farm and Jimmie and Ira were on the return trip home. Cruising along and enjoying the scenery, Ira whiffed smoke . that did not seem to come from Jimmie's pipe More whiffing and the smoke smelled sort of leathery like and like rags burning. Ira glanced around saw a nice bon-fire in rear of the truck box . stopped . . got out investigated . . his sheepskin lined coat had gone up in smoke and nearly caught the truck box afire to boot!

Ira did a bit of detective deducting and remembered that he had put matches in the coat pocket. The coat bouncing around in the truck box ignited the matches . . . the Coat . . . and Ira's pleasant disposition.

To His Nephew

Be courteous to all, but intimate with few; and let those few be well tried before you give them your confidence True friendship is a plant of slow growth, and must undergo and withstand the shocks of adversity before it is entitled to the appellation. Let your heart feel for the affections and distresses of every one, and let your hand give m proportion to your purse, remembering always the estimation of the widow's mite, that it is not every one that asketh that deserveth charity; all, however, are worthy of the inqury, or the deserving may suffer.

Do not conceive that fine clothes make fine men, any more than fine feathers make fine birds. A plain, genteel dress is more admired, obtains more credit, than lace and embroidery, in the eyes of the judicious and sensible

—George Washington

AROUND K. H. S.

The general science class has been studying the functions of the human body The three subjects which they stressed most are the digestive system, the circulatory system and the excretory system.

The classes in high school and the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades competed to see who could sell the most tickets for the Senior Class Play, "Big Hearted Herbert".

The bookkeeping class has been studying interest-bearing notes and endorsements.

Dwaine J has turned out to be very patriotic lately. He keeps red, white and blue hair ribbons pinned on his shirt pocket.

The seniors order their cards and announcements last week.

The biology class has completed its study of supply and demand. In this topic the course of the food through the body and changes that take place with the food in the different organs was studied.

The American History students have been studying the histories of major and minor political parties.

The World History class has completed its study of the World War The causes of the war, the generals of the war, and the countries participating were some of the topics of discussion

The Senior home economic class will soon be through sewing. Three girls are making spring dresses, one girl is making a skirt, and two are making print housecoats.

The juniors are working hard on the banquet, and the seniors are trying to learn something about it We have heard the seniors aren't having any luck.

If you want to see the latest pajama patterns, look up the fresh men girls. A few of them had ideas of their own about sewing pajamas together. We have heard a lot about the times the girls have been ripping.

The American Literature class is studying late American authors and dialect poems. They read Negro, Italian, Western, Pike and boy dialect poems.

The English II class is reading the story of "Ivanhoe", which was written by Scott. The story takes place in days of Chivalry.

MUSIC HIGHLIGHTS

Now that the contest is over and the band received an excellent rating, we are planning on giving a Sunday afternoon concert Still more attention will be given to marching, so we can have a nice marching band for the Music Festival.

The Music Mothers met Friday afternoon. All Music Mothers are strongly urged to attend these meetings, because with the cooperation of this organization, the band and other musical groups will be able to give still better performances. The next meeting will be May 10. Try and come.

DRAMATICS

(Some notes from my little "play book.)

If you've never seen an Irisn washer woman, your chance is coming. Margie B. portrays the part so vividly, you would believe she is of Irish decent.

Dwaine J., "Big Hearted Herbert", doesn't think college men are worth their salt. Yet his daughter, Marian W., wants to marry a lawyer, Dorance G. How the problem is solved, will not be unveiled before you see the play

Herbert is proud of his brass cuspidor He can't see what's in it to be ashamed of.

Junior, Marvin L., wants to go with his uncle, Raymond S., to a construction camp after he is out of high school. His father, who has his heart set on common life, will not hear of it. He must go into the factory.

Amy Lawrence, Elsie T., seems to get on her brother in law's nerves. Herbert doesn't approve of her taking his daughter to the Springs Summer Resort. He doesn't want his children to be brought up in society

Elizabeth, Herbert's wife, is almost frantic over all the sudden happenings. Elsie W., does the part nicely as his wife and usually keeps Robert, Winton E., under her protection

Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich, Howard S., and Marie S, are very proud of their son, who is to marry Alice They are very much surprised at the conduct of her father in her home, when they are there to spend the evening.

DON'T MISS THIS PLAY! ! ! ! PLEASE! ! !

An extra note: Why is it Marie Schmidt always runs out of gas before she gets home from play practice?

Meanwhile Rathbone has succeeded in unbarring the door to the box and several people, among them a surgeon, rush in. They see the tall form of the President slumped forward in his chair, his sad eyes closed, never to open again. Someone brings a shutter, torn from a building near by, and they lay his gaunt form upon it. They carry him out of the theater to the house of Charles Peterson across the street.

Ford's theater is empty, deserted now. Its curtain has been rung down upon the comedy, "Our American Cousin"—and upon one of the greatest tragedies in American history.

Death at 7:22 A. M.

The next morning Washington newspapers carried this story:

"The body of President Lincoln, who died from an assassin's bullet at 7:22 o'clock this morning, was removed from the Peterson residence opposite Ford's theater to the executive mansion in a hearse and wrapped in the American flag. It was escorted by a small squad of cavalry and by Gen. Augur and other military officials on foot. A dense crowd accompanied the remains to the White House, where a military guard excluded the people, allowing none but persons of the household and personal friends of the deceased to enter. Gen. Grant arrived here at 2 o'clock in a special train from Philadelphia. His presence tends somewhat to allay the excitement. The last lines penned by Mr. Lincoln were written on a card about 8:15 p. m., while seated in his carriage in front of the White House just before he started for the theater. They were addressed to the Hon. George Ashmun and were as follows: 'Allow Mr. Sherman and friends to come to me at 9 a. m. tomorrow.

'A. Lincoln.' "

Leaf through the pages of James G. Blaine's "Twenty Years in Congress," published in 1886, and read there this description of the events which followed:

"The remains of the late President lay in state at the executive mansion for four days. The entire city seemed as a house of mourning. The martial music which had been resounding in glad celebration of the national triumph had ceased; public edifice and private mansion were alike draped with the insignia of grief.

"Funeral services, conducted by the leading clergymen of the city, were held in the east room on Wednesday, the 19th of April. Amid the solemn tolling of church bells, and the still more solemn thundering of minute guns from the vast line of fortifications which had protected Washington, the body, escorted by an imposing military and civic procession, was transferred to the rotunda of the Capitol.

"The day was observed throughout the Union as one of fasting and prayer. Services in the churches throughout the land were held in unison with the services at the executive mansion, and were everywhere attended with exhibition of profound personal grief.

The South in Sorrow.

"In all the cities of Canada business was suspended, public meetings of condolence with a kindred people were held, and prayers were read in the churches.

"Throughout the Confederate states, where war had ceased but peace had not yet come, the people joined in significant expressions of sorrow over the death of him whose very name they had been taught to execrate.

"Early in the morning of the 21st the body was removed from the capitol and placed on the funeral car which was to transport it to its final resting place in Illinois. The remains of a little son who had died three years before were taken from their burial place in Georgetown and borne with those of his father for final sepulture in the stately mausoleum which the public mind had already decreed to the illustrious martyr. The train which moved from the national capital was attended on its course by extraordinary manifestations of grief on the part of the people."

As for the story of that sorrowful journey westward, no one has ever told it better than Carl Sandburg, poet and Lincoln biographer. The closing words of his masterpiece "Abraham Lincoln: The War Years," (published this year by Harcourt, Brace and company)—words whose stark simplicity remind one of such writings as the Gettysburg Address—are these:

"There was a funeral.

"It took long to pass its many given points.

"Many millions of people saw it . . .

"The line of march ran seventeen hundred miles.

"Yes, there was a funeral.

"From his White House in Washington—where it began—they carried his coffin, and followed it nights and days for twelve days . . .

"Bells tolling, bells sobbing the requiem, the salute guns, cannon rumbling their inarticulate thunder.

"To Springfield, Illinois, the old home town, the Sangamon nearby, the New Salem hilltop nearby, for the final rest of the cherished dust.

"And the night came with great quiet.

"And there was rest.

"The prairie years, the war years, were over."

Patterns
SEWING CIRCLE

USING this one clever pattern (1928-B), you can make a pretty complete play wardrobe for your young hopeful. It includes a scrap of a sun-suit, a sweet little frock, and a nice, scoopy, eye-shading bonnet, and every one of the three trifles takes practically no time to make. They're all just as comfortable to play in as they are cute to look at.

The sun-suit consists of straps and gathers in the back, and is perfectly straight in the front. The yoke of the frock is extended into wings of kimono sleeves, and rows of braid trim every possible edge of both the frock and the bonnet. Simple as it is, the pattern includes a step-by-step sew chart as well as complete directions. Gingham, seersucker, percale and chambray all come in colors which are particularly nice for tots' play togs like this.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1928-B is designed for sizes 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 years. Size 3 requires 3⅝ yards of 35-inch material without nap for the ensemble; 5½ yards ricrac braid. Send order to:

Stale News

Smith and Black were traveling to business in the same coach. Suddenly Black gave a yawn that showed his tonsils.

"Tired, old man?" asked Smith. "Up late last night? Well, some scientific Johnny says here that four hours' sleep is enough for any man."

Black looked at him wearily.

"That's not new," he growled; "my baby knew it when he was a month old."

Scented Cinemas

The films have made extraordinary progress since the early days when half an hour at the movie resulted in eye-strain. In addition to the actual pictures we now have music, singing, talking and color. Some films even give a three-dimensional effect if viewed through a sort of stereoscope. Now we have advanced still further and filmgoers will be able to smell their pictures.

At the "smellies" various appropriate scents will be wafted to us during such scenes as rose-gathering, fruit-picking and hay-making.

MICKEY ROONEY TO STAR IN "YOUNG TOM EDISON" AT THE AVERY

Giving Mickey Rooney his first portrayal of a real life character, a role in which the boy star has an opportunity to prove that he is a genuine actor. "Young Tom Edison" opens at the Avery Theatre next Sunday for an engagement of three days.

Not only does this picture present Rooney with his first biographical role but it is the first such role ever given a juvenile player, despite the fact that many adults have played real-life characters repeatedly. "Young Tom Edison" also marks the second teaming with Virginia Weidler, who scored as his nemesis in "Out West With The Hardys." She plays his sister in the present picture Fay Bainter plays Mrs. Edison, and George Bancroft, Mr. Edison.

The story is an intense human interest one, complete in itself although it only covers the boyhood of Thomas A. Edison. Replete with comedy, drama, tears, thrills and adventure, it is basically the story of the triumph of a typical American boy who had to show his home folks that he was not the numbskull they believed him to be

LOCAL SCHOOL TAKING PART IN "CHILDREN'S CRUSADE FOR CHILDREN"

The local schools are taking part this week in an unusual movement called the Children's Crusade For Children. It is a movement with a double purpose. The first purpose is an effort to teach children and parents to appreciate the blessings of life in a country free from war and tyranny The second objective is the collection of pennies from any of the school children who want to give for a fund to be sent to Europe for relief work there among the children who have been robbed of homes and schools by the ravages of war.

It is suggested that each child contribute a number of pennies equal to the years of his age, but no child is to feel obligated to give more than he can afford A contribution of even one cent from some students would be appreciated.

Each grade school room and the high school study library has been supplied with a tin can bank into which pennies can be dropped sometime between April 29 and April 30, the dates of the campaign. These banks and all printing and adminstrative overhead have been contributed in order that every penny given by the students can be sent directly to Europe without the loss of one cent for expenses.

The movement is backed by leading authors, publishers, educators, ministers and statesmen throughout the country. It is hoped that Klemme's contribution to this worthy cause will truly show the gratitude felt by students and parents alike for the privilege of maintaining homes and schools in a "Free Country."

Final Burial

Egypt is planning to rebury its Pharaohs, sealing them down under the earth never again to be seen by the eye of man. Once they were exibited in the museum at Cairo, but later were removed by the government to the mausoleum built as a tomb for Zaghloul Pasha, national hero, who died nine years ago Last year the government moved Zaghloul from a temporary tomb and reburied him in the mausoleum, moving the Pharaohs back to the Cairo museum. Now it is proposed to build a special mausoleum for them either at Giza, near the pyramids, or at Heliopolis. Throughout the land thousands believe that wresting the Pharaohs from their tombs has brought bad luck

MANURE STEPS UP THE STRAWBERRY YIELDS

Soils are seldom too rich for strawberries.

This fact has been demonstrated by work carried on by the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station to determine the effect of fertilizer on strawberries. Results obtained from four crops showed that stable manure applied at the rate of 15 to 20 ton per acre and plowed under before the plants are set greatly increase production.

Beats Commercial Fertilizer

Work done at the Experiment Station bears out the conclusion that strawberries are benefitted most by large amounts of organic material in the soil and that commercial fertilizers cannot replace humus-forming barn or green manure. Tests in which a commercial fertilizer of 5-7-7 formula was applied at various time in amounts of 800 to 2,000 pounds per acre didn't prove profitable. Applications made in the spring actually decreased yields. However, it was found that applications made on 3 to 5 year old plantings gave significant increases over comparable unfertilized plots.

Continue Experiments

In the planning of a strawberry bed, the start should be made 2 or 3 years ahead of the planting by incorporating into the soil large quantities of organic matter.

Work with strawberries is being continued at the Muscatine Island field station at Fruitland, where the Buckner coarse sandy soil is well adapted to show the effects of fertilized treatments. Overhead irrigation will be used, and it is hoped that with this combination additional information may be obtained as to the effects of fertilizer and cultural practices under controlled moisture conditions.

'Listen, My Children, and You Shall Hear': Story of the Long-Delayed Start of a New Ride by Paul Revere

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

LISTEN, my children, and you shall hear . . .

No, not the familiar story of the "Midnight Ride of Paul Revere."

It's the story of another ride by that immortal horseman—a ride that should have started more than 50 years ago, but didn't. Here's why:

Back in 1884, on the eve of the 150th anniversary of Paul Revere's birth, a movement was started in Boston to erect a statue to the Revolutionary patriot at a cost of $25,000. The city council indorsed the plan and appropriated $5,000 as its share of the cost, the remainder of which was to be raised by public subscription. Furthermore, the city fathers passed an order, authorizing the use of Copley square as the site for the proposed memorial.

Next a committee was formed to have charge of the project and this committee issued circulars inviting sculptors to submit models for the statue. It made no suggestion as to the character of the design but offered to pay $300 each for the three best studies.

Eight of ten models were submitted by sculptors from all parts of the country, all of them, of course, anonymously. From these models the committee selected three—those sent in by Daniel Chester French, who had made the famous "Minute Man" erected on the site of the battle of Concord; by Thomas Ball, who was the sculptor of the statue of Washington which stands in the Public Garden in Boston; and by a certain "Charles E. Dillon of Utah," who was unknown to the committee.

A Young Westerner.

After long deliberation the committee unanimously decided to accept for the statue the design by this "Charles E. Dillon" and it was soon announced in the newspapers. Then it was discovered that they had misspelled the name of the winner! His right name was Cyrus E. Dallin, a young fellow of 23, who had been born in Utah and had arrived in Boston four years before, penniless, lonely and bewildered because he had never been in a big city before.

THE MINUTE MAN
Statue by Daniel Chester French on the site of the Battle of Concord.

His first work was in a terra cotta factory and, while working there, he had made an ornament for Mechanics hall. It was the seal of the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanics association and it consisted of an upraised human arm which young Dallin had modeled after the upraised arm of a young Indian, one of a delegation en route to Washington to see the "Great White Father," whom he had met on the train and with whom he had talked in the sign language.

"That arm is still there in Mechanics hall. I like to go around and look at it now and then," the 78-year-old sculptor of today will tell you with a smile. "I got the magnificent sum of two dollars for doing that seal. That two dollars looked like $2,000 to me at that time—and it doesn't look so small, even now, at times."

It is easy to imagine the young sculptor's thrill when he learned that he had won the Paul Revere competition. Returning to his small studio he found a card under the door. On it was written.

"Dear Dallin: I came up to congratulate you on your well-deserved victory.—Daniel Chester French."

Says Mr. Dallin: "That was the kind of greatness that Daniel

CYRUS E. DALLIN, famous sculptor, and the plaster model of the equestrian statue of Paul Revere which the George Robert White Fund trustees, headed by Mayor Tobin of Boston, have commissioned him to execute in bronze at a cost of $27,500. The statue will be erected in Paul Revere Mall in the north end of Boston, close to the home of the Revolutionary patriot.

Chester French had in him! No wonder that he could comprehend and interpret the great and generous Lincoln as understandingly as he did in that Washington Memorial marble of the Great Emancipator.

"From that day until his death, a few years ago, French and I were close friends. I have always noted in life that the bigger a man is, the more generous he is toward others. There is no feeling of jealousy in a great man. He is too sure of himself to fear others in his own profession. When a man is jealous of another man in his own profession it is an open confession that he is not sure of himself and his own powers."

Soon after Dallin was announced as the winner of the Paul Revere competition, the city of Boston gave him a contract to make the bronze statue. Then unexpected difficulties arose, due to the jealousy of an artist whose son had been unsuccessful in the competition. He started a controversy in the Boston papers by charging that Dallin's model was historically inaccurate. Although other artists rallied to the defense of the young Westerner, the dispute grew so hot that the committee decided to hold a second competition.

Dallin Wins Again.

French entered it again, as did Thomas Ball, sculptor of a statue of Lincoln in "The Emancipation Group," the original of which is in Washington and a copy in Boston. But again Dallin was the winner and again the generous French sent him a note: "Dallin, you've beat us again. You're far and away ahead of the rest of us!"

Jubilant over his success, Dallin returned to his home in Utah, there, as he says, "to celebrate my victory and to bask in the sunlight of the approval of my parents and friends." But he soon learned that the celebration was a bit premature.

He returned to Boston in the spring of 1885 to complete the statue. He was called to the mayor's office and again a contract was signed. But when the committee tried to raise the money for the statue by popular subscription, it found that the controversy, which Dallin's rival artist had stirred up, had made many people hostile to the project.

Within a short time it became evident that the public had lost interest in the project. Subscriptions to the fund came in so slowly that it was doubtful if the sum required for the statue could ever be raised. Swallowing his disappointment as best he could, the young sculptor started on another project.

Remembering the Indians whom he had known in the West, Dallin designed the figure of an Indian, standing on the skeleton of a buffalo and shooting an arrow into the air. He exhibited it in New York in 1888 and it won the gold medal of the American Art Exhibit.

This new triumph had an unexpected result. A wealthy Boston woman who sympathized with the young sculptor over his difficulties in the Paul Revere competition offered to provide the money for him to study in Paris. Thus, out of what had seemed to be a major tragedy to an ambitious young sculptor, came his great opportunity and he eagerly accepted it.

Soon after he arrived in Paris Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show arrived there and Rosa Bonheur, the famous woman painter, took advantage of the opportunity to paint the American horses and their Indian riders. One of her favorite models was old Chief Rocky Bear.

He Meets Rosa Bonheur.

One day Dallin saw her at work on a painting of Rocky Bear. It inspired him to become a sculptor of Indians and horses and from that inspiration came the idea of the Indian equestrian groups which are to be found in several American cities. The first of these was the familiar "The Signal of Peace." The next was "The Medicine Man" in Philadelphia and the next "The Appeal to the Great Spirit" which stands in front of the Boston museum.

Since that time Dallin has produced many other famous statues—"The Scout" in Penn Valley park in Kansas City; "Massasoit" in Plymouth, Mass.; "Anne Hutchinson" which stands in front of the state house in Boston; and his famous tribute to the American soldiers taken prisoners by the enemy during the World war—the statue which he called "Captured But Not Conquered." He also did the Pioneer monument in Salt Lake City and the Soldiers' and Sailors' monument in Syracuse, N. Y.

For Cyrus Dallin is now one of America's best-known sculptors. But it is probable that, for all the honors that have come to him, he will take more pride in his masterpiece, which is to stand in Paul Revere Mall in Boston. It is the spirited statue of that famous midnight rider, reining in his equally famous horse as he pauses to shout his warning, "The British are coming!"

A few weeks ago it was announced that the trustees of the Robert White fund, headed by Mayor Tobin of Boston, had commissioned him to execute in bronze, at a cost of $27,500, the design which was selected away back in the eighties. So, after half a century, Cyrus Dallin, the unknown young sculptor who had come out of the West, is vindicated, and an undeserved stigma has been removed from his fame as an artist. And, after a long delay, Paul Revere will soon start on another ride!
